JAIL ENTIRE FAMILY; HOME FULL OF LOOT

Father, Mother, Son and Fiancee Confess, Police Say.

LANSING, MICH. — In the arrest of William E. Hamilton, aged 50, his wife Emma Hamilton, aged 46, his son, Willard Hamilton, 23, and the son's fiancee, Beatrice Kelly, the Lansing police think they have discovered evidences of systematic shoplifting from stores in southern Michigan cities.

In the home of Hamiltons, which was searched, the police declare they found more than $1,600 worth of goods. Prior to the search Hamilton confessed, according to the police, and admitted that the four had stolen from stores in Saginaw, Jackson and Detroit. Later it is said the others confessed.

The arrests were caused by a downtown store. The Hamiltons were there, with the Kelly girl looking at some plumes. As the clerk turned away to wrap a purchase she thought she heard the catch of a case snap. Some plumes were missing when she took a second look. An officer caught up with the four in a neighboring store. Arrests followed, the plumes being found on the girl.

It is said, that the four traveled from town to town in Hamilton's automobile. The father and son who were employed at a local auto body works were laid off some time ago on account of slackness in the industry.

Hamilton, in his admissions the police say, declares the Kelly girl is to blame for the family's start in crime. She up until three or four months ago worked in a Lansing store. The police say she was discharged for alleged thefts. She asserts she quit. Hamilton says he purchased a shirt in the store one night and when he got home found the Kelly girl had wrapped two shirts in the bundle. Then, he says, she explained how easy it was to pilfer and the whole quartette started in.

Father and son are among the best known residents of North Lansing, where the father has lived for years.

Fumes Overcome Kent Men.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. — Truant Officers C. J. Larson and John Morris were overcome by gas fumes in the former's garage and undoubtedly would have died had they not been found by Mrs. Morris. Artificial respiration restored them to consciousness.

Farmer Discovers Wife Nearly Overcome as House Burns Down.

ROCHESTER, MICH. — Mrs. Edward Tucker, wife of a wealthy farmer, living near here, narrowly escaped being burned to death, when the Tucker home was destroyed by fire. Mr. Tucker and the family of one of his employes fled from the burning house when awakened by smoke. Mr. Tucker found his wife had not escaped, plunged into the house and carried her out just as she was on the verge of being overcome.

The loss is estimated at from $3,000 to $4,000.

ALLIES OCCUPY CITY IN BELGIUM

French Troops Take St. Georges; Other Gains Reported.

RUSS CHECK FOE ON VISTULA

Petrograd Says Austrians Are Hurled Back in Carpathians—Vienna in Denial—Two British Ships Sunk in North Sea by Mines—Blizzard Raging in France and Belgium.

A gain of more than two miles by the allies in Belgium; violent bombardment by the Germans of the allies' positions along the main road from Roye to Amiens; recapture by the allies of the village of St. Georges and of lost trenches after violent charges and counter charges, and substantial gains in the Alsace district, were reported in an official communique which electrified Paris.

Two more steamships have struck mines in the North Sea. The British steamship Linaria, which was last reported at Marseilles on Nov. 28 struck one of the floating mines and sank at some point which is not [illegible] crew was rescued. The Glasgow steamer Gem was also destroyed by a mine. Two of its crew were rescued. The others are missing.

LONDON — The Germans now are on the defensive between the Pilica River and the Upper Vistula, according to reports from Petrograd.

The Russians also report the capture of more than 20,000 prisoners, to which reference was made in previous announcements.

A Petrograd dispatch also says that all the important passes on the Carpathians are again in Russian hands.

"On the 27th between the lower Vistula and the Pilicia rivers German attacks everywhere were repulsed. The Germans suffered heavy losses, especially during an attack to the southwest of Skierniewice.

"Between the Pilicia and the Upper Vistula the enemy has adopted the defensive.

"Our troops stormed the village of Szitniki, which was stubbornly defended by the Austrians. The enemy has definitely evacuated the left bank of the Nida.

"To the south of the Upper Vistula on the front of Opatow-Biecz the fighting continues to develop to our advantage. From the 13th to the 26th we captured there 200 officers and 15,000 soldiers and forty mitrailleuses.

"The enemy's retreat in the region of the Dukla Passes and on the road to Liska is becoming more and more precipitate and disorganized. On the 26th we captured in this region as many of 3,000 prisoners."

Russ Forced Back, Claim.

VIENNA — In an official statement the Austrian government claims that the Russians have again been forced back after fighting of the fiercest character. The statement says:

"North of the Dukla pass the Austrians have avoided a series of planned Russian attacks and have maintained their original positions. In the neighborhood of the Carpathian ridge and in the plain between the Bzura and the Donajec rivers the enemy has delivered a series of fierce attacks, all of which have been repulsed.

On our south front there has been a few frontier skirmishes with the Servians that have been comparatively unimportant. At Semlin the Servians have been able to blow up a bridge."

Allies Continue Attacks.

LONDON — General Joffre's French troops continue their offensive in the Argonne region while a terrific storm is raging along the Franco-Belgian battle line. They have made a slight advance, but whether this offsets an earlier reserve south of Ypres is not disclosed in the official French reports, which announce a prior gain near the sea and capture of a trench near Lens.

The latest German report recounts the capture of some of the allies' trenches south of Ypres and the repulse of allied attacks elsewhere.

Correspondents in the rear report that the Belgians, as a result of five days' sapping, have captured nearly 3,000 Germans with only small losses to themselves. The fighting Christmas in Belgium was the fiercest of the fiercest of the month.

Plot on Chinese President Nipped.

SHANGHAI — Many arrests have been made at Pekin in connection with an alleged plot to depose President Yuan Shi-Kai, according to dispatches received here. The purpose of the conspiracy, it is said, it to overthrow the republic and re-establish the monarchical form of government.

Swiss Army to Demobilize.

PARIS — The Swiss government has decided to order a partial demobilization, according to the Petit Parisien's Berne correspondent, who says that 250,000 men will gradually be released from duty.

KILLING OF AMERICAN ACCIDENT, CANADA

Soldiers Say Shot Was Meant to Scare Hunters.

BUFFALO — The killing of Walter Smith and the wounding of Charles Dorsch, American hunters, by Canadian soldiers on the Niagara River near Fort Erie Monday was unintentional, according to information gathered by the military authorities and forwarded to Ottawa. The soldiers were aiding a provincial officer to arrest the men for alleged violation of the Canadian game laws

Thomas W Delaney, a provincial officer, said the men were shooting at ducks near the head of the river. He decided to arrest them, and Captain Fite, in command of the border patrol, sent three soldiers to help him. Delaney called out to the men that they were under arrest and ordered them ashore. The soldiers fired a volley over their heads.

"Don't hit them," cautioned Delaney.

"We'll come ashore as soon as we pick up the decoys," shouted one of the hunters. The Americans rowed upstream toward the decoys. Suddenly the boat headed for the American shore.

"They've got away; let them go," Delaney told the soldiers.

"I'll give them another scare," said one of the soldiers. He raised his rifle and fired one shot. Both hunters toppled over in the boat. Smith shot through the head and Dorsch wounded in one arm.

J. B. Curtis, acting United States consul at Fort Erie, made a preliminary report to the state department. Secretary Bryan telegraphed the consul to make a complete investigation.

Brooding Over Family Deaths He Slays Son-in-Law and Daughter.

BOONVILLE, IND. — Brooding over the sudden deaths of a daughter and son, and believing that Thomas Green, colored, an alleged hypnotist, was in some manner connected with the deaths, A. M. Jennings, colored, of Chandler, called Green from his home and fired two shots into his body. Green is probably fatally injured. He is a brother-in-law of Jennings. When Jennings learned that officers were on their way to Chandler from Boonville to arrest him he shot and killed his youngest daughter and barricaded himself in his home, but was later arrested.

A daughter of Jennings died mysteriously Christmas eve. At her funeral a brother was suddenly stricken and died. The father connected Green with the mysterious deaths.

DETROIT, MICH. — Dearborn is mystified over the case of George McFarland, aged 26 years, of Highland, Mich., who was found late at night lying unconscious in the road at Sper's stop, two miles east of that village.

McFarland was discovered by the motorman of a westbound interurban car and brought to the village. McFarland says that he had been waiting for a street car to take him to Ypsilanti when someone came up from behind and knocked him out. He said he had been robbed of $20 and some jewelry.

U. S. IN PROTEST TO GREAT BRITAIN

Wilson Makes Fight Against Seizure of Ships.

MUST PROTECT SEA TRADE

Ambassador Page Is Instructed to Present Demand For Less Strain Upon Commerce of America—Statement Is Virtually Intended For All Powers of Triple Entente.

President Wilson referring to the American note to Great Britain insisting on better treatment for American commerce, declares that large damages eventually would have to be paid by England for unlawful detention of American cargoes.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The United States government has dispatched a long note to Great Britain insisting upon an early improvement in the treatment of American commerce by the British fleet. It gave warning that much feeling had been aroused in this country and that public criticism was general over unwarranted interference with the legitimate foreign trade of the United States.

The document constituting the strongest representation on this subject made by the United States to any of the belligerents since the outbreak of the war was cabled to Ambassador Page to be formally presented to Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign secretary. Its preparation was begun a month ago by Solicitor Johnson, Counsellor Robert Lansing, and Secretary Bryan, and finally during the last two weeks had the personal attention of President Wilson himself who revised its phraseology with minute care.

In Terms of Frankness.

As the detailed point of view of the case of detention and seizures of cargoes had been set forth in a series of emphatic protests, most of which have gone unheeded, the communication was couched in general terms covering the entire subject of the relations between the United States and Great Britain as affected by the later's navay policy, considered highly objectionable by this government.

The note declares at the outset that the representations are made in a friendly spirit, but that the United States considers it best to speak in terms of frankness lest silence be construed as acquiescence in a policy on the part of Great Britain which infringed the rights of American citizens under the laws of nations.

Hits All in Triple Entente.

Since France has adopted practically the same decrees on contraband as has Great Britain, this note is virtually a statement intended for all the members of the triple entente.

The document points out that complaints on every side and public criticism in the United States hold the British policy as directly responsible for the depression of many American industries, a situation the seriousness of which mut be apparent to Great Britain.

Reimbursement alone for cargoes unlawfully detained or seized, it states, does not remedy the evil, as the chief difficulty is the moral effect of British practice on American exporters, who are restrained by it from taking risks or hazards which in no case ought to surround legitimate trade between the United States and other neutral countries.

Must Protect Citizens.

Feeling has been aroused on the subject to such an extent, the communication adds, that the American government feels compelled to ask for definite information as to Great Britain's attitude in order that it may take such measures as will protect American citizens in their rights.

The United States, it points out, was patient at first, realizing that the unexpected outbreak of hostilities had heaped a mass of burdens on the British government and thinking an early clearing of the air would come.

MUST AWAIT END OF WAR

U. S. Will Not Recognize Belgium as German Territory.

WASHINGTON — New regulations by which the German government proposes to govern the activity of foreign consuls in Belgium were received officially at the state department from the Berlin government. According to the view of officials at the state department the German government does not ask the United States to accord recognition of Germany's political status in Belgium territory, so there is full confidence that the question will be satisfactorily arranged.

The United States is determined not to recognize that portion of Belgium controlled territory by the German as German territory in advance of the adjustment which can only come with peace in Europe.

A Wonder Of the Sea

It Was Seen Near the Middle of the Last Century

By OSCAR COX

Captain Enoch Nicholson was master of a New Bedford whaling ship when that industry was in its prime. He was accustomed to go forth on to the waters where he would remain several years, then back to New Bedford to dispose of his product. On one of these outings he decided to take his family with him. It consisted of his wife and daughter Harriet, aged fifteen. That was the era of sailships. True, steam had been applied as a motive power but only on the land, and the engines used were very crude machines. Fulton had applied steam to a boat on the Hudson river, but no one had thought of a ship driven by steam. It was not till about the year 1840 that the paddle wheel steamer began to ply the ocean regularly.

Captain Nicholson, always on the water, knew little or nothing about what was going on on land, and his family lived in a little New England village, where a newspaper seldom penetrated. The consequence was that if they had ever heard of steam as a motive power they were not capable of understanding how it could be effected, and it made no impression upon them.

Captain Nicholson's wife and daughter went to New Bedford and at once boarded his ship, the Molly Stark, and sailed with him the same day on a three years' whaling voyage. They brought with them the few books they could gather in that primitive village in New England, including schoolbooks for Harriet. The captain had fitted up a cabin for their especial occupancy, and they were as well prepared as they could be at that time to make a home upon the ocean.

The three years passed with the usual mixture of storm and sunshine, angry and smooth waters. Then the captain turned his ship's nose toward home. His wife and daughter naturally were much pleased at the prospect of leaving their cramped quarters.

Off the Maine coast they ran into a heavy fog, and, there being no wind, the Molly Stark rolled on a broad ground swell, and her sails flapped as she leaned to port or starboard. There was not the fear of collision in those days there is now, and Captain Nicholson, had there been a breeze, would not have hesitated to take advantage of it. As it was, he went to sleep in his cabin and permitted his crew, except a single man, who remained on deck to report any change in the weather, to do the same.

It was just after daylight, when a chorus of snores was rising from the face of the deep, that Nicholson was aroused by Tim Bunsby, the watch. Turning, he saw the man bending over him with a face white with fear.

"Captain!" he called in a tremulous voice.

"What is it?" asked the captain, starting up.

"There's a sea monster on the port quarter!"

"A sea monster?"

"Yes. It's a-puffin' and a-snortin' and a-swishin' in the water and a-breathin' smoke."

"Breathing smoke?"

"Yes, I can't see it, but I can smell it. If the thing attacks the ship we'll all go to the bottom."

The captain leaped from his berth, shuffled into trousers and pea jacket and hurried up the companionway. On reaching the deck a burnt smell of smoke reached his nostrils. But the fog was thicker than ever, and he could see nothing but his ship. Just then there came a succession of snorts from the starboard.

"It's moved," said Bunsby. "When I went down she was on the port side."

The snorts ceased, but there was a disturbance of the water, swirl and foam passing the Molly Stark.

Now, Captain Nicholson was as bold a man as ever sailed the ocean. Moreover, he had an eye for business. We are all prone to think in lines to which we are accustomed, and the captain's mind was naturally inclined to oil. The monster might or might not be a whale; but, whatever it was, it was likely to contain oil. All fish contain more or less of the substance. The smell of smoke tended to this idea. If the huge fish breathed fire and smoke there must be fuel in its belly. That fuel was more than likely to be oil or some other fatty substance. While these things were passing through the captain's mind there came a sound which seemed to come from the throat of a huge gander.

Jim muttered a prayer. The captain's cupidity gave way to his fears, and he stood irresolute for a while; then pulling himself together, he resolved to get a sight of the monster under the fog.

"Call up the crew," he said.

Bunsby, who was glad enough to get something to do to divert his mind, went below and came back, followed by the mate and a dozen seamen.

"Mr. Hawkins," said the captain to the mate, "there's some sort of a marine animal near us. I wish to get a view of him from the water surface. Lower a boat and put in the largest harpoon aboard."

"Aye, aye, sir!" responded the mate.

But just as the men grasped the rope that held the boats to the davits the snorting recommenced. Every man stood still, and all turned pale. In a few moments swirls of foam came toward the ship.

"It's swimmin' away from us," said the mate.

"Hadn't we better let her go?" cried Tim Bunsby.

"Let her go? We can't help ourselves with no wind. We may be losing a hundred barrels of oil."

The fog thinned, and through it those on the Molly Stark could discern a dark mass, a protrusion on either side, the whole resembling a huge duck with wings partly stretched. But the vision lasted only a moment, for the fog thickened again and shut it off. The snorts grew fainter, as did the striking of the feet of the huge bird on the surface of the water as it paddled.

"It's not a whale," said the mate. "It's a mammoth duck."

"Ducks are web footed," suggested one of the men. "This thing doesn't draw back its feet through the water; it hits the surface every time."

The snorts ceased, the hammering on the water stopped, the foam swirls came less rapidly and soon ceased altogether.

"Thar's a leetle breeze, cap'n," said Bunsby. "Don't you think we'd better take advantage of it to git away?"

The captain paid no attention to this timid request. He said that since the thing was of the bird rather than the fish variety there was no hope of getting oil from it, but there might be feathers such as the world had never seen, and a fortune might be reaped by securing them and towing them into port. But the mate was of opinion that feathers were only used in America to decorate women's hats, and, judging from the size of the bird a woman to wear its plumage must be 400 or 500 feet high.

While they were debating this matter the fog was suddenly illuminated and a horrible hissing sound emerged from the monster bird. This noise awakened all who had remained asleep, and they came pouring up the companionway.

"What is it?" asked the captain's wife in terror.

"We don't know," replied her husband. "There's some strange monster varmint out there that's been paddling about and snorting and blowing fire and smoke."

"Dear me, will it sink us?"

"It certain will, mum," Tim Bunsby broke in, "unless you can persuade the cap'n to get out of its way."

The hissing sound continued. Harriet Nicholson listened to it, but apparently without any terror. She was the only one of the party who had heard the sounds made by a steam engine. Some twenty miles from her home a railroad was being built while she was on a visit there, and she had heard the sound made by the blowing off of steam.

"There's a steam engine out there," she said.

"A steam engine!" exclaimed her father. "What's a steam engine doing on the ocean? I've heard they pull stagecoaches on the land, but how can a track be laid on the water?"

Suddenly the fog lifted, and there in plain view was the dark hull of one of the first ocean steamers ever built. Amidships was a stack vomiting smoke; on either side was an arched box, beneath which the paddles of the huge wheel were visible beating the water. A stoker was shoveling coal into the open furnace door, and the fires cast a bright light through an open port.

Terror on the part of those on the Molly Stark gave way to wonder as the stern of the steamer grew smaller in the distance, giving it the appearance of a huge bird.

"I'm going to retire, sure enough," exclaimed Captain Nicholson, "as soon as I reach port. I don't care to run any such fire bird as that!"

The Great Western—this was the steamer's name—crossing the ocean had met with a mishap to her machinery and had been obliged to stop to fix it. She had started on once or twice, but something proved wrong, and she was obliged to stop. Hearing sounds from the Molly Stark, she had blown her whistle.

Captain Nicholson on the completion of his voyage retired with a fortune. He went to Boston to live and became much interested in steam as a motive power, and, living to be an old man, saw the Great Eastern, the first of the mammoth ocean steamers.

Might Have Boosted Prices.

"I suppose it is annoying when a man goes out because you haven't something cheaper."

"Yes," said the small merchant. "But what gives you heart disease is when a fellow goes out because you haven't something more expensive."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Nerves and Battle.

It is claimed that the nerves of city dwellers stand the stress of battle better than men who have lived in the country. The explanation is that the city type of man has become habituated to noise, and terrific noise is an element of battles.

SAFETY FIRST.

A few years ago one our leading Railroads figuring on some way of reducing the number of accidents and loss of life in handling the business of their road conceived the idea of the "Safety First" movement. The movement has spread very rapidly until one can scarcely go any where without being confronted by a "Safety First" sign. Railroads have tacked up the signs every where along their lines and in their shops, instructed their men to be careful in handling anything of a hazardous nature. Factories and shops of all kinds have taken up the movement.

So good are the circulars issued by the N. Y. Central Lines that John R. Edwards, Commandant of the U. S. Navy Yards located at Charleston, S. C., has caused copies to be printed and posted on each bulletin board of each industrial shop as well as furnished to the Commanding Officer of each vessel undergoing repairs at this station. The notice reads as follows:

SAFETY FIRST, SAFETY ALWAYS.

Many shopmen are injured by the careless handling of material, allowing things to fall on one another or themselves. Don't try to handle heavy material without sufficient help and take time to handle it safely.

Many are injured falling over material left lying in walk ways or by stepping on nails sticking up in planks. Every employee should make it his duty to keep walk-ways cleared of such material.

Many are injured by pieces of steel breaking off tools that have "burred" or "mushroomed" heads. Tools should never be used when in this condition. Foremen and employees should see that all tools are properly dressed and in good condition.

Never use a machine that should be guarded without the guard in its proper place. Failure in this regard may cost you a limb or your life.

When engaged in chipping, riveting or grinding, always wear goggles to protect your eyes from injury. Goggles will be furnished each man engaged in such work free of charge by the Company. (These appliances are likewise furnished by the Government.)

Do your work the right way—Do it the safe way. You owe it to your families to avoid getting hurt. Think also of your fellow workman and his family and avoid hurting him.

CHILDREN TO GIVE BOY SKIN

Schoolmates of Cornelius Pel Offer Cuticle to Save Leg.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. — Fifty boys and girls will give skin to be grafted upon the leg of little Cornelius Pel, who was run over by a heavy truck five weeks ago. It was not until this week that skin grafting was decided upon. Pupils of the Hall street school and the Sunday school classes of Holland Unitarian church were asked to aid the little fellow. The half-hundred who volunteered went under the knife at Butterworth hospital.

Each child will lose a quarter of an inch of skin.

The Episcopal church was most beautifully decorated for the Christmas festivities. A beautiful Rood screen of evergreens separated the choir from the audience and the music was of the very best. The Childrens exercises on Monday evening were well worth all the work that had been done for the happy faces of the girls and boys were ample recompence. A program of recitation and song was given then lead by Santa Claus they all marched into the Parish house, where three Christmas trees well laden with presents were ready for them, Santa Claus gave each one an orange, a bag of candy and pop corn and a special present to each. The Parish house was lighted throughout with candles, making it a typical Christmas time. The various committee headed by Mrs. R. N. Lewe on the decorations and Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Harris chairman of the business arrangements certainly deserve much credit for the success of the entertainment.

More Than One Trafalgar Square.

The Scotland Yard examination which would be taxicab drivers have to undergo in the knowledge of London is no mere matter of form. "If," asked the inquisitor recently of a candidate, "a fare hails you in Trafalgar square and asks to be driven to Trafalgar square, what would you do?" "I should drive him around a bit and drop him on the other side of the square," replied the candidate. And he was turned down, for he did not know that London has three Trafalgar squares besides the finest site in Europe—one in Camberwell, another in Chelsea and still another one in Stepney.—London Chronicle.

STOP BUYING EXPENSIVE COUGH REMEDIES

Make the Best at Home

Money spent for the old style, ready made, cough syrups in bottles holding only 2 to 2½ ounces is very largely wasted, because most of them are composed principally of sugar and water. Yet you have to pay the same price as if it was all medicine. Stop wasting this money. You can make a better cough medicine at home at one-fifth the cost. Merely go to B. J. Pulver's Drug Store and ask for two ounces (50c worth) of Schiffman's Concentrated Expectorant. Mix this with one pint of granulated sugar and one-half pint of boiling water which makes a full pint (16 ounces). This new, simple, pleasant remedy is guaranteed to relieve the worst cough or cold. Also excellent for Bronchial Asthma, Bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and whooping cough. One bottle will make enough home-made cough medicine to probably last the whole family the entire winter. Children like it. It is so pleasant to take and it positively contains no chloroform, opium, morphine or other narcotics as do most cough mixtures. Keep it on hand in case of emergency and stop each cough before it gets a firm hold. The above druggist has been authorized to return the money in every single case where it does not give perfect satisfaction or is not found the best remedy ever used. Absolutely no risk is run in buying this remedy under this positive guarantee. adv.

The Faults of Others

Charity does not require of us that we should not see the faults of others, but that we should avoid all needless and voluntary observing of them and that we should not be blind to their good qualities when we are so sharp sighted in their bad ones. What if others are weak, is that a reason for your no longer keeping any measure with them? You that complain of their troubling you, do you give nobody any trouble? You that are so shocked at the faults you see—if all to whom you have been troublesome should return the trouble they have had with you, you would be oppressed with the weight, and, besides, even supposing that men had nothing to reproach you with, yet consider, further, what obligations you be under from God to show forbearance toward others for which you know you have such abundant occasion at his hands.—Fenelon.

The Only Authentic European War Pictures.

For the first time in history, scenes of actual war-fare in all its grim horror and distinctiveness will be shown in the moving pictures, just as it actually occurred in the battle of Alost, Aerschot, Malines, with the burning of Antwerp, the flooding of Lierre and the destruction of Termonde, when the Chicago Tribune Belgium War pictures are shown here for the first time at the Bradley Opera House for one night only, Monday, January 11th.

These pictures are the only actual battle views so far obtainable and were secured by Edwin F. Weigle staff photographer of the Chicago Tribune after an agreement had been entered into with the government of Belgium to allow the Red Cross of that country fifty per cent of whatever profit the Tribune secures from the exhibition of the pictures.

The concensus of opinion of all who have seen them has been that they are the most wonderful pictures ever thrown on a screen. They show better than whole pages of newspaper stories the terrible conditions that exist in Belgium, the absolute need of charity in that direction for the stricken people and more than anything else they show what a fearful thing war is in reality. To one who has never seen an actual battle and there are few who have, the pictures convey better than anything else what a titanic struggle is now going on and what a vast need there is for a world wide movement for ever lasting peace and help to the various stricken nations. For while those pictures are taken on the Belgium side, the same conditions naturally exist wherever a battle is fought.

"EXCUSE ME"

A big hit. Read what the Adrian and Detroit papers say of this big comedy by Rupert Hughes.

"Excuse Me," the Pullman car comedy by Rupert Hughes, was enjoyed by a small audience at the Croswell Saturday night. This play, which ranks with "Baby Mine" and "Seven Days" as the funniest farce of the modern stage, was here for the second season; which probably accounted for the small house. Some people remained away because it was the second engagement and they feared a poor company, while others had been informed by people with a peculiar sense of humor, who saw the play last year, that it wasn't so very funny. Both classes of stay-at-homes were badly cheated, as the company was excellent, while the play, from the shuffling entrance of Jerry Hart, who played the the colored porter's part to a turn, to the comic melodramatic ending, was a hearty laugh without cessation.

Jerry Hart, the colored porter, was the star of the piece. but to many in the audience George Berry, who acted the part of Jimmy Wellington, who sought divorce and drink to escape from the charms of Mrs. Jimmy, was if anything funnier than the acknowledged star. Belva Morrell had the difficult part of Marjorie Newton, the train's bride, and played it to perfection.—Adrian Daily Telegram-Monday Dec. 28.

Who was it said art was long?

Belva Morrell and Graham W. Velsey establish world's records for the hold, over variety of osculation, nontransferable. The play is an uproarious, rollicking farce all the way through. Except that kissing. That is the most earnest, serious and heartfelt work done on a local stage in many a moon.

The play is a novelty. All the action takes place on an overland limited train, speeding from Chicago to Reno. It has been seen here before but judging from the size and enthusiasm of the audience the previous appearance made the piece many friends.

The principals are Harry Mallery and Marjorie Newton, the prize kissers, who elope, but haven't time to get married before boarding the train. The subterfuges to which they are put to observe the conventions and at the same time act as a married couple during the four days' ride produce most of the comedy. There are divorced couples, a bachelor and an old maid, but everybody is reconciled before the ride ends, and the divorce lawyer has to content himself with two holdup men captured by the hero for his clients.

Jerry Hart, the Negro porter, is the star comedian. His appreciation of all circumstances, with a body shaking laugh keeps the audience in sympathy with him all the way. George Berry, as "Little Jimmy" Wellington, with a perpetual souse, is one of the stars of the cast David R. Young, the bachelor, is very good. The women in the cast play up well. The heroine. Belva Morrell, is a real star. —Detroit News-Monday Dec. 28.

"Excuse Me" which comes to the Bradley Opera House, next Friday January 8th, is the same company that is playing at the Lyceum theatre Detroit, all this week. They carry a car load of special scenery. in fact "Excuse Me" is one of the heaviest scenic productions playing in Tecumseh, and over twenty people. The stage settings are very novel, each act representing the interior of different cars on the Pullman train. The settings are exact reproductions of the different Pullman cars, including the lighting effects, seats etc.

The first part of the second act which represents the train enroute is the most unique scenic effect ever attempted and with the use of special electrical effects the scene is made to look true to life.

Patrons of the Bradley who enjoy the very best in good clean comedy should see "Excuse Me" by all means.

The Presbyterian S. S. held their annual concert last Sunday evening at the church singing and literary exercises by the scholars made up the program with an address to the school by Supt. Wells who was re-elected for another year.

The Leap Year hop tomorrow evening will certainly be well attended and will be a most brilliant social event of the season. The program of dances will suit every one, there being a good proportion of round dances thereon, and all the arrangements have been well perfected. Gallery tickets 15c or two for 25c.

Today the young gentlemen are receiving the compliments of the day and the young ladies are being entertained. The following young gentlemen are receiving at the residence of Wm. Hayden. Albert Hayden assisted by Matt Root, Harry Root, Archie Sheerard, Mr. Blinn of Ann Arbor, Mr. Whitney of Jan Jose Cal., Harry Sherrard, P. V. Woodard, Alf James and Will Robbins. The list of callers is quite large and a gay day is being passed by all.

The Episcopal Society held services last Wednesday evening for the children when an address was delivered by the Rector. On the evening following Christmas, the regular service was held. The church was decorated with evergreen and trimmed with flowers as usual. Though the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Hayden the society enjoyed a festival on Saturday evening at their residence, and closed the festivities at 10 o'clock.

One of Hook's Puns.

Theodore Hook, the inveterate punster, could pun with gayety upon matters that touched his own pocket. He enlivened the usually prosaic and unwelcome duty of paying his taxes by a word of advice to his neighbors to do likewise—which it is to be hoped the worthy Mr. Winter, the collector, found of some assistance:

Here comes Mr. Winter, inspector of taxes.
I advise you to pay him whatever he axes.
I advise you to pay him without any flummery,

The Farce.

Farce is a modern term founded on the Latin verb facire, to stuff. This was originally an allusion to the practice of the ancient buffoons padding out their stage dress to abnormal dimensions. Later the padding was dispensed with, but the wide garments were retained.

The Traveler's Companion

Mr. Arthur L. Pierce, 2618 Sheridan Ave., St. Louis, Mo. "The curative value of Peruna is truly wonderful. I think it especially valuable as a specific for catarrh of the system, and for a man who has traveled for years as I have and who is certainly exposed to irregular meals and uncomfortable sleeping accommodations, Peruna is one of his best and most needed traveling companions. It throws off disease and keeps him well. I therefore heartily recommend it."

Many a Tecumseh Citizen Knows How Sure They Are

Nothing uncertain about the work of Doan's Kidney Pills in Tecumseh. There is plenty of positive proof of this in the testimony of citizens. Such evidence should convince the most skeptical doubter. Read the following statement:

Mrs. C. Stevenson, Wyandotte & Potawatamie Sts., Tecumseh, says: "The first system of kidney complaint in my case was a sharp, shooting pain across the small of my back, which made it almost impossible for me to lie down. Some [illegible] Doan's Kidney Pills a trial and I did, procuring my supply at C. A. Wright & Son's Drug Store. After I had taken this remedy a short time, the pains and aches left and gravel that had been a source of constant suffering, no longer troubled me. In fact, I felt like a different person. I have since recommended Doan's Kidney to a number of my friends and shall continue to do so. My former endorsement holds good."

PATTI STOOD PAT.

One of Adelina Patti's peculiarities was that she never sang a note until she had her salary either paid or so fully assured that there was no doubt as to her getting it. When she sang at the Academy of Music, in New York, at one time the manager was sorely put about to find money to pay her, but she always stoutly refused to sing until she had her salary.

One night at a quarter past 8 her representative went to him and said: "Madam is all dressed except her shoes. She will put those on when she gets the money."

The manager, half distracted, rushed about the house and succeeded in raising one-half the amount due the prima donna, which he hastily sent to her. But another quarter of an hour passed, and, though the audience showed great impatience, there was no Patti, whereat the manager ran to her room.

"My dear madam, why do you not go on? I have sent you half the money, and the rest will reach you before the end of the first act."

Patti smiled dolefully, exhibited the tips of her feet and said: "You see, I have only one shoe on. I cannot go on the stage without the other. It would be quite impossible."

Almost crazed, the manager rushed out and discovered that the other half of the money could be raised.—New York Tribune.

NERVES AND WATCHES.

When They Don't Agree There Is Sure to Be Poor Time.

One of the troubles of watchmakers is the man who gets on his watch's nerves. There are lots of customers on whom a good watch is wasted. A good second hand watch that has kept perfect time for other people will with certain other people go irregularly when it is not standing still. It is common knowledge in the trade that watches are greatly influenced by their owners.

Nobody knows the reason, but two explanations have been offered. One is that watches are sensitive to personal magnetism, the natural electricity that human beings contain in varying quantities.

The other is that a watch may be disturbed by the vibrations set up by a footstep which is heavier than the ordinary. The man who puts his heels down heavily usually needs to set the regulator toward slow to keep it from gaining.

One of the mysterious sides of the subject is that watches seldom keep good time on people of nervous, excitable temperaments.—Pearson's Weekly.

Gestures Part of Talk.

There is a man who from a very early age has lived in countries where Spanish is the almost universal tongue. From force of this training he speaks Spanish perfectly. He has not the slightest trace of an English accent, and persons who do not know that he is of American parentage are willing to believe he is a Spaniard merely from hearing him talk. He is so perfectly bilingual that it shows even in his gestures. When talking with English speaking persons he sits quietly and does his conversing with his mouth alone. Only in case of making a point most emphatically does he use a gesture. But the moment he drops into Spanish his every word is accompanied by a movement of the hands or arms. It is interesting to watch the change from the English to the Spanish side of him, because it comes so suddenly. He really can't speak Spanish without gesturing.—New York Sun.

Training a Dog.

It may surprise some people to be told that dogs have a strong sense of justice, so, unless you want your pup to gain a poor opinion of you, be careful when you punish him. Never punish unless the pup can associate the punishment with the offense. The circumstantial evidence may be very strong, but you had better wait and catch him in the act. Common sense is about all that is required to rear a puppy into a dog which will be a faithful, useful, steadfast companion—common sense and consideration. Whenever I find one of those "anything will do for the pup" kind of people I can see in my mind's eye what the humans in that family look like.—Outing.

Guarding a Modern Fort

The modern fort is armed with a garrison of 200 or more men who work the guns in watches much as if they were on a battleship. While the direct fire guns are surrounded by pits of ten foot concrete and are protected by armored cupolas, the guns rising to fire and dropping back after each discharge, these places are by no means safe. A. von Schwartz, a Russian artillery officer, in describing the defense of Port Arthur, in which he took part, told of the havoc of the Japanese guns and of the rain of shells that made it impossible for food to be brought from protected communication lines for a half-day at a time. Because of the certainty of death which awaits any body of men attacking the trenches of either during broad daylight, surprise night attacks are favored by both besieged and besiegers, but particularly by the latter. Hence searchlights, mines and circles of electric wires are used by both sides and add not a little to the horrors of war.—Walter S. Hiatt in Leslie's.

Ferocious Looking Sikhs.

Did you ever see a Sikh in uniform? No? Whatever of fierceness your childhood fancy painted upon the face of a soldier, the Sikh has it. Other soldiers may be as brave or may fight more tenaciously or die more willingly, but for simple fierceness of personal appearance all medals go to the Sikh.

A Sikh—and I've seen many regiments of them on their native heath—is a tall man with black hair and a long black beard. The beard is what makes him look so fierce, because he plaits it into two thick braids and draws these back of his ears, where they are tied.

If you think that doesn't make a soldier look fierce, you make a sad error, which one glance at him would correct.

The Sikhs are Hindus, and so strict are their religious beliefs that all the food they eat must be especially prepared according to their own rites.—Girard in Philadelphia Ledger.

Gentle Consideration.

The sayings of little folk frequently are sage as well as suggestive. A literary magazine recalls the naive remark of "Penini" Browning, son of the famous poet, when, during some childish illness, his devoted mother bent anxiously above his bed.

"Think it's a little boy in the street," the child murmured, desiring to be of comfort, "and you won't feel so bad."

Land of the World.

The area of the earth is 199,712,000 square miles, of which only about 55,000,000 are land. The average altitude of all the land above sea level is 2,411 feet; hence if all the land above sea level—25,000,000 cubic miles—was spread uniformly over the globe it would form a shell 600 feet thick.

Untimely.

Be Clean! Inside and Outside

If you would be healthy, strong and happy. Baths keep the skin clean and in good condition. But what about the inside of the body? You can no more afford to neglect it than the outside. It is just as important that the system be cleansed of the poisonous impurities caused by weakness of the digestive organs or by inactivity of the liver.

Not What It Was For.

When Miss Julia Bryant, daughter of William Cullen Bryant, was a little child, an aged lady, who was for a time a neighbor of the poet and his family, had been shown into the parlor of the house, where she was making her first call. She found the small Julia seated on the floor with an illustrated volume of Milton in her lap. Although she knew, of course, that it must be the artist, not the author, in whom at that early age the child was interested, she asked genially by way of beginning an acquaintance.

"Reading poetry already, little girl?"

Julia looked up and regarded her gravely. Then she explained, with an air of politely correcting inexcusable ignorance:

"People don't read poetry. Papas write poetry, and mammas sing poetry, and little girls learn to say poetry, but nobody reads poetry. That [illegible]"

Legal English.

The circumlocution of legal documents is the penalty of having a bilingual language and descends to us from those countries when the English and the Normans were slowly amalgamating into one people. So the two races, in the market place or in social converse, to make their meaning clearer, joined a French word to an English or vice versa. That is why in the prayer book words so often run in couples: "Humble and lowly," "acknowledge and confess," "assemble and meet together." The English was for the English, the Norman-French for the French. Chaucer is a great user of such bilingual phrases: "Hunting and venereye," "wright and carpenter," "care and heed." And that is whence lawyers get such talk as "aid and abet," "will and testament" and "use and wont."—London Opinion.

Travel and Comfort.

Comfort is only another term for habit. The older we grow the more "sot" we become until any break in the routine of existence spells discomfort. One's slippers must be beside the bed and one's clothing disposed on the same hooks and chairs day after day; the water for shaving must be of the right temperature, breakfast is wanted, and so through the twenty-four hours.

Now, travel disarranges this routine; therefore it is well to travel—more or less; to fish for slippers in the welter of a valise's contents, to shave with cold water, to breakfast at some one else's convenience and in general to move along the line of most resistance. Even good habits need disrupting now and then, for the pursuit of comfort leads to selfishness and inconsiderateness, as the paths of glory lead but to the grave.—Chicago Tribune.

The Candle Wick.

When the old fashioned dips were in common use great annoyance was caused by the burnt wick standing upright as the fat disappeared, making a smoky flame, which necessitated a constant use of the snuffers. This trouble is avoided in the modern candle by the simple expedient of plaiting one side of the wick a little stiffer than the other. When it is left free, owing to the wax having burnt away, it naturally bends over to one side. Now at the extreme edge of the flame the gaseous products of the candle are mixed with excess of oxygen from the air, which attacks the solid substances in the wick and speedily changes them into oxides. This always keeps the wick the right length.

The English courts once had a real Dickens trial scene. It was in 1888, in the course of a case before Baron Huddleston, that Mr. Dickens, counsel for the defendant, astonished the court by announcing that he proposed to call Mr. Pickwick as a witness. And the gentleman called was a descendant of the Moses Pickwick whose name on the coach filled Sam Weller with a desire to "whop" some one for taking liberties with the name of his master.

Long Hours

"How's the new man? Industrious?"

"It can't be possible!"

"Oh, yes, it is. He works eight hours a day, and I put in eight hours more trying to keep him on the job."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

MOTHER SUPERIOR ROSARY HILL HOME

Rosary Hill Home, Hawthorne, N. Y. —"I have been at work among the sick and poor for nearly eighteen years, and whenever I have used Vinol for rundown, weak or emaciated patients, they have been visibly benefited by it. One patient, a young woman, was so weak and ill she could hardly creep to my door for aid, and was leaning on a friend's arm. I supplied Vinol to her liberally and in a month when she returned to thank me I hardly recognized her. She was strong, her color charming and her cheeks rounded out. These words are uttered from my heart, in order that more people may know about Vinol, as there is nothing makes me happier in the world than to relieve the sick."—Mother M. ALPHONSA LATHROP, O.S.D., Hawthorne, N.Y."

Such disinterested and reliable testimony should convince everyone of the merits of Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic to build up health and strength for all weakened and nervous conditions, whether caused from overwork, worry or chronic coughs and colds. If Vinol fails to benefit we return your money.

A Quick Revenge

Story of the Balkans

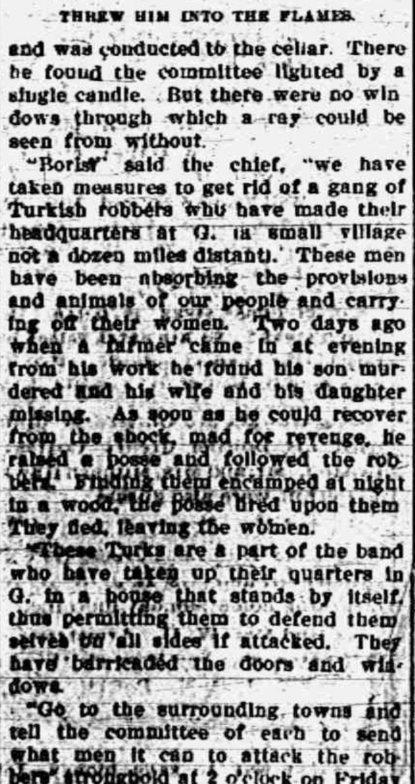
By F. A. MITCHEL

The incipient cause, or at least the pretended cause, of the war between the triple alliance and the triple entente [illegible] when a struggle was inaugurated between the Christians and the Turks in the Balkan states. About 1908 the Christians made preparations to throw off the yoke of their Mohammedan masters, who had dominated them for centuries. The condition of the people was terrible.

When this became intolerable the Christians began to organize for revolution. But all must be secret, and to work in secret was extremely difficult, for Turkish soldiers patrolled the country and were always on the watch for some movement on the part of those they were keeping subservient to them. In each town or hamlet was a revolutionary committee, which met, usually, in some loft where it was secure from the enemy's spies.

But these committees must form some sort of union, for so long as they worked separately they could accomplish nothing. The only way such a union could be formed was through secret communications. This developed a number of persons whose business it was to carry messages between the revolutionary committees.

One night one of these messengers was summoned to attend a meeting of a revolutionary committee to be held in the cellar of the dwelling of one of the committeemen. The town in which the meeting took place was only a hamlet, and all was dark by 9 o'clock. At the appointed hour the messenger appeared before the house, the door silently opened, and the man passed in and was conducted to the cellar. There he found the committee lighted by a single candle. But there were no windows through which a ray could be seen from without.



THREW HIM INTO THE FLAMES.

"Boris," said the chief, "we have taken measures to get rid of a gang of Turkish robbers who have made their headquarters at G. (a small village not a dozen miles distant). These men have been absorbing the provisions and animals of our people and carrying off their women. Two days ago when a farmer came in at evening from his work he found his son murdered and his wife and his daughter missing. As soon as he could recover from the shock, mad for revenge, he raised a posse and followed the robbers. Finding them encamped at night in a wood, the posse fired upon them. They fled, leaving the women.

"These Turks are a part of the band who have taken up their quarters in G. in a house that stands by itself, thus permitting them to defend themselves on all sides if attacked. They have barricaded the doors and windows.

"Go to the surrounding towns and tell the committee of each to send what men it can to attack the robbers' stronghold at 2 o'clock on Friday morning. Let all the parties take position without the town of G. to be ready when ordered to advance upon the robbers. Let them have arms and ammunition, but we will provide what may be necessary to unearth the villains provided other means than bullets be required. Go and caution every one to be discreet."

"Who is to command the attack?" asked Boris.

"The committee has chosen me to command."

"Very well; I will see that at the hour appointed at least three parties will be in position to close in on the robbers."

The messenger passed out into the night, and the head committeeman, Alexander Arkad, gave instructions to two of the men to get ready certain articles that would likely be needed in the attack. Then those present one by one silently left the house.

At 2 o'clock on the appointed morning four parties approached G. from opposite points and stopped a short distance outside the town. That headed by Alexander was the largest and carried, among other articles, a heavy piece of oak timber. Alexander made a circuit around the town to see that the different detachments were in position and returned to his own party. He ordered all to wait fifteen minutes by the watch, then close in about the robbers' stronghold.

It was a perfectly clear night. No moon, but myriads of stars glittered above, brighter for being seen through the clear atmosphere of that mountainous region. The quiet heavens were in contrast with the struggle about the open. The time the men wasted seemed interminable, and all were relieved when it was over. Then each body advanced as quietly as possible, covering that part of the house to be attacked as appointed. Last came Alexander and his six men, four of them bearing the heavy timber. Placing one end at the door of the house, they then swung it back, then drove it forward, and the stillness was broken by a loud thud against the door.

Again the timber was swung back, and thrust forward, the contact resounding in the still night. No light appeared in the village. If a face was at any window it could not be seen. Doubtless citizens in their beds soon realized that something was in store for the men who had been terrorizing them and offered a silent prayer that the end of their sufferings was about to come. The women hugged their children to their breasts and shuddered.

The door was well barred, and it required a dozen blows of the battering ram to force it open. When the desired result was obtained and there was nothing to obstruct a passage several of the attacking party entered, but they were received by a fire from within and retired.

And now the besieging party began to discover that, though they were very near the house, the robbers found ways of bringing their fire to bear upon them. Several were picked off, when Alexander ordered his men to withdraw behind any article of defense they could find. Then for a time there was a desultory firing between the two forces, with no definite results. At last Alexander directed one of his men who had remained in the rear to bring forward combustibles.

Several men took kindling saturated with kerosene, ran swiftly to a part of the house where it was most difficult for the robbers to shoot them and, crouching on the ground, placed the kindling against the house and ignited it.

The besieged now saw that their doom was sealed. If they remained where they were they would be burned or suffocated; if they surrendered they would receive no quarter. They could only sell their lives as dearly as possible. But there was nothing to shoot at, for the attacking party were all screened. Presently a flame began to crawl up from the kindling, growing brighter and brighter, crawling higher and higher, till it cast a light on the surrounding houses. Then the Turks could better discern the positions of their enemies and recommenced their firing.

And now faces began to appear at the neighboring windows. But the malice of the Turks, who, since they must die, were ready to kill even women and children, drove away these inoffensive persons. Not a shot was fired by the attackers, though the Turks exposed themselves, hoping to die rather by the bullet than by fire. They had shown no mercy to the Christians whom they had robbed, murdered and tortured, and now their destroyers would not grant them the boon of lead instead of fire.

By this time the house was enveloped in flames. A Turk ran out, hoping to be shot. He was filled with bullets, but those who shot him took care that he should not be struck in a vital part. He fell, and one of his enemies—the man whose wife and daughter had been carried away—picked him up and threw him into the flames.

The cries of these miscreants who had long terrorized this region grew less and fainter till at last they ceased altogether. Then and not till then the people of the hamlet came out of their houses, many of them in their night clothes, and, wild with joy, danced around the building, from which still issued fitful flames. It may seem barbarous to us, living in a land of law and order, but when the oppressed turns against a barbarous oppressor the Christian virtues are not to be expected.

When it was all over the several detachments withdrew each to its own locality, while the older persons of the town went back to bed, leaving the children to dance about the smoking ruins. The struggle for the freedom of the Balkans from Turkish domination grew in magnitude till it became a great war. The Turk was driven to Constantinople, and it looked for awhile as if the states would be free from Turkish rule. But the Balkans are composed of different races, speaking different languages, and, having achieved their purpose in getting rid of the Turk, they began to quarrel among themselves. Then their ancient enemy came back to tyrannize over them as of yore.

But the Turk is not the only one to take advantage of their differences. More recently the flame of war broke out all over Europe for the disputed possession of these little mountainous states that seem intended especially to be in perpetual warfare themselves and a reason for war in others.

German Soldiers Yell by Orders.

Here is a curious instance of the German way of doing things. The German military system does not take into account the natural impulse of a charging, excited trooper to yell anyway under the vociferous conditions of a battle. He is commanded to yell as part of the shock action to which each man must contribute to make overpowering. During the winter schooling he actually is drilled in individual charging to yell at a certain point in the charge and is severely criticised if he does not make noise enough. It is the same with singing. The Germans are naturally a musical people and sing spontaneously, but with regiments in the field songs are started and stopped by command.—World's Work.

Mending a Broken Nose.

Dr. O. A. Lathrop of Boston reports to the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal on a remarkable operation by which he straightened a baseball player's nose that had been smashed by a bat. He cut a strip of bone two inches long and a quarter of an inch wide from the inner edge of the man's shoulder blade and inserted this in his nose. Four weeks later the graft had entirely healed and the nose had assumed its normal shape and color.

Time in West Africa.

Because of the scarcity of clocks in West Africa events are timed by the regular daily occurrences. For example, a native wrote that she had received news of her sister's sickness "a little while before the guinea fowls talk"—that is, about 5 o'clock in the morning.

"EXCUSE ME"

Farce, exceptionally clever and jolly farce, the sort of entertainment that tones up the system with merriment and provides a store of laughter that brings forgetfulness of every torment flesh is heir to, will be the attraction at the Bradley Opera House, next Friday, January 8, when the S T. King Amusement Co., (Inc.) offers Rupert Hughes delightful play "Excuse Me."

"Excuse Me" is one of the sensational comedy hits of years. It ran for nine months at the Gaiety Theatre in New York for one whole season, the entire summer and well into the following season. Then to Boston where it remained four months. Simultaneously another organization was playing it for six months in Chicago These runs, which are of unusual length denote the popularity of "Excuse Me" and shows that it has touched the public's fancy to an uncommon degree. People like this farce—all manner and classes of people. There isn't a normal person who will not be carried away by its mirth and comedy. "Excuse Me" is farce, not burlesque It is good, clean, bright, clever and ingenious. Every minute there is a laugh sixty seconds long, and it is laughter that doesn't make you feel silly either, for there is a reason for it, in fact several reasons. These are lively humor, keen wit, comic complications, amusing persons and everything else that goes to make sparkling, high class comedy.

The setting for "Excuse Me" is a railroad train, This is a novel and effective idea. The three acts of the play are represented in the pullman cars of an Overland Limited express on a mile a minute trip out west, and the fun is swifter than the train, which is going some for both. Passengers and train crew are the characters in the play, and the episodes of the journey furnish the comedy. The persons are very different types, all interesting and so is what they do and what is done to them on this two thousand miles of travel that is supposed to take four days. There is real adventure, some genuine thrills to give variety to the comedy, and there is modern romance in every section of the pullman sleeper. In fact "Excuse Me" while farce has dramatic strength. It is a real play that puts life to view on the stage. It naturally deals with comic phases and presents them humorously, but in the respect that it has possible persons and probable events, and does not depend upon grotesquely absurd characters and situations for laughter, it is far and away better than farce usually is It is a rattling good play that will be generally enjoyed.

The company that will appear in "Excuse Me" is a New York organization. It is a remarkably clever comedy combination and exceptionally big for farce, entailing the services of twenty people.

GRANGE MEETING

The annual banquet of Tecumseh Grange was held last Thursday at Grange Hall with about 125 at table. A program of music and toasts was given, A. O. Howard acted as toast master. At the close of the program the young people took charge and old fashioned games were enjoyed by old and young alike. As the hour of midnight approached, lights were turned off and three hearty cheers were given to welcome in the year of 1915 The out-of-town guests for the evening were Mr. and Mrs. Athol Brainard of Springville, Ed. Sales and Ed. Moran of the M. A. C, Florence Bryan and Earl McNiel of Eaton Rapids, Misses Mildred Boyce, Fern Hanford and Albertine Boyce who were home from Detroit.

JOLLY SIXTEEN

The Jolly Sixteen were very pleasantly entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Aldrich at her home last Thursday evening Progressive pedro was the game of the evening, Mrs. Geo. Church and Mrs. Ethel Mathias receiving 1st and 2nd honors, Refreshments were served at the close of the games. The next meeting of the club will be with Mrs. Guy Belding on Friday evening.

THE SILENT SLAVE

The play of the "Silent Slave" was presented at the Opera House Thursday evening under the auspices of the Commerce Club. A small house greeted the play owing to so many social events of the holiday season The cast of characters and the acting by every one was exceptionally fine and deserved a packed house. Every character taken by local talent was well represented and it would be hard to discriminate as to who was best. As a villian Sheldon Southwick was very good. Paul Hunt represented the rich man's son to perfection and as a commedian Floyd Ager could not be excelled. The sisters Mabel and Chic West in their diverse character of Lady and Tomboy were well represented by Lydia Babcock and Alma Kloffenstein. The leading characters as taken by Mr. and Mrs A. O White were of course up to date in every particular.

MRS. D. B. GARLINGHOUSE

Carrie Wolcott was born in Bradford, Steuben Co. N. Y. April 20, 1841 and died at her home in North Adams Mich. Dec. 30, 1914. She was the youngest of a family of eight children all but two brothers, David Wolcott of Portland, Mich and I. C. Wolcott of Toledo, O., having preceeded her to the Great Beyond. She came with her parents, Caleb Wolcott and wife to Michigan in 1846 and resided in Tecumseh where she spent the greater part of her life,

May 28, 1871 she was united in marriage to Daniel B. Garlinghouse of Macon To this union were born two daughters, Lulu E, who died Oct. 15, 1893 and Edna M.

Early in life she was converted and joined the Baptist church in Tecumseh, she was a faithful worker for her Master until failing health prevented her doing more.

In June 1902, the family moved to North Adams, where she resided until the call came to come home. She had been in failing health for nearly a year but no one heard a word of complaint. She was of a cheerful disposition, ever ready to minister to those in need and will be missed by all. Our loss is her gain. God's finger touched her and she slept.

The postponed meeting of the Wit and Wisdom club will be held Monday evening, Jan. 11, 1915, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rosecrans.

One of the many funny situations in the laugh producing farce "EXCUSE ME" coming to the Bradley Opera House, Tecumseh, Friday, January 8th.

Not Up to Date.

"My dear," said the proud father, "I cannot understand your objection to young Prudely as a suitor for your hand. I am sure that he is a model young man."

"There is no question about his being a model," replied the bewitching beauty; "but, father, dear, the trouble is that he is not an up to date model."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Royal Society of England.

The Royal Society of England is the oldest and most renowned scientific body, except the French Academy of Sciences, in the world. It was organized in 1645, and every great English scientist has been a member of it. Benjamin Franklin was the first American member.

Faulty System.

Mamma—What are you doing, Edward? Small Edward—I'm counting. You said I should count a hundred when angry. Mamma—Yes, I believe I did. Small Edward—Well, I've counted over 200 and I'm madder than when I started.—Chicago News.

Placing Him.

"My father's elected on the committee which is going to have some more driven wells put down for the city."

"Ah, I see; he's on the water bored."—St. Louis Republic.

And Enjoyed It.

Ethel—Didn't it seem an age from the time you were engaged till you got married? Maud—Yes, but Jack and I managed to squeeze through it.—London Tatler.

I speak the truth, not so much as I would, but as much as I dare, and I dare a little the more as I grow older. —Montaigne.

Seeing in the Dark.

Sir J. J. Thomson is authority for the statement that when a body is heated above the temperature of boiling water it ordinarily begins to be faintly visible, especially by averted vision, but no definite color is discerned until the temperature has risen considerably higher. This suggests that the first effects are felt by the "rods" and not by the "cones," which together form the retina. The cones are specially concerned with the perception of color. From this one would infer that animals which see in the dark must have retinas particularly rich in rods, and physiology shows that this is notably true of the owl, whose retina is remarkable for the extremely great proportion of rods to cones. In a faint light, states Professor Thomson, the owl sees no color, but he sees something which is good enough for his purposes where we would see nothing at all.—Philadelphia Record.

Grecian Food For Dreamers.

Hasheesh, the strange drug which has given our language its word "assassin"—a man so frenzied by the drug that he accomplishes murder—is used by the Persians, Turks and Egyptians. It is the product of a plant grown in large quantities in the Peloponnesus (southern Greece), in the district about Tripolitza. The plant grows to a height of about four feet, and its branches are thickly covered with small leaves and studded with tiny seeds. The entire plant, stalk and branches, is cut within a few inches of the root and laid out in the sun to dry. The branches are then rubbed to separate the seeds, and these in turn are ground into a fine powder, which constitutes the drug. The drug has the power of inducing sleep and producing pleasant and fantastic dreams. Continued use of hasheesh renders its devotees [illegible] and results in a wreck of their mental and physical constitution.

An Old Time Joker.

It happened that Dean Swift, having been dining at some little distance from Laracor, his residence, was returning home on horseback in the evening, which was very dark. Just before he reached a neighboring village his horse lost a shoe. Unwilling to run the risk of laming the animal by continuing his ride in that direction, he stopped at one Kelly's, the blacksmith of the village, where, having called the man, he asked him if he could shoe a horse with a candle.

"No," replied the son of Vulcan, "but I can with a hammer."

Lingering Leave Taking.

The visiting lady had kept her hostess at the open door fully half an hour saying goodby. Finally an irate masculine voice indoors called out:

"Say, Maria, if you're going out, go; if you're staying, stay, but for heaven's sake don't ooze out."—Harper's Magazine.

Ordered the Kings Around.

Prince Metternich, prime minister to the emperor of Austria, was once asked under what circumstances had Napoleon, whom he had often met, given him the most striking impression of prestige and sovereignty. It was, he said, one morning at Compiegne, when they returned from a drive in the forest. They returned to the castle about noon. The emperor, leaning his back against the chimney, chatted with his guests while awaiting the summons to lunch. There were a number of personages and members of the imperial family present. Napoleon began to feel the pangs of hunger, so he turned to Murat, "King of Spain, go and see why we do not lunch." The emperor resumed his argument, but the delay was still prolonged. He grew impatient and, turning to the other side, he said, "King of Holland, try to find out whether we are to lunch today!" Metternich had never before seen an emperor send kings to the pantry to hasten a meal.—Baltimore Star.

Starting Forest Fires.

Engines—portable and locomotive—are bad enough. But when it comes to deliberate, willful carelessness the campers are the most criminal miscreants of them all. Hunters, hikers and automobile parties are prime offenders against the fire laws of the state. One-third of all the forest fires must be charged against these mental and moral defectives. They make a high grade moron look like a modern Solomon. They should be abated as supreme nuisances. To build a campfire and go off and leave it burning or half put out or to build it in such a way and of such size as to make it a constant source of danger while it burns—can you imagine anything that is a more infallible index of inferior mentality in the individual who builds the fire? Most of them look intelligent and appear to have common sense until they build a fire in the woods. They ought not to be allowed to carry matches.—Countryside Magazine and Suburban Life.

Schools of Finland.

The folk schools of Finland are particularly fine, with their cooking apartments, gymnasiums, manual training and needlework. Every school has excellent bathing facilities, and the poorest children are fed at the schools. There are little zoological museums in most of the schools.

There are so many varieties of schools, besides the folk schools, elementary and higher; there are lyceums, schools of forestry, of agriculture and of navigation, schools for training teachers, commercial schools, technical, music and art schools, etc. There are three large garden schools in Finland, where boys as well as girls are taught cooking. "They must learn to cook what they grow," said one of the teachers. The dairy schools are particularly interesting. Dairying comes second among the industries of Finland. The pupil must have worked for one year at a butter factory before he or she will be admitted to the school.—Christian Herald.

What "S O S" Means.

In talking with the wireless operator, many ship passengers ask the meaning of the three letters used in the distress signal, "S O S." There seems to be a general opinion that the letters are the abbreviation of three separate words with a definite meaning. Persons of an imaginative trend will tell you that the letters stand for "Save our ship," "Send out succor," "Sink or swim" or some such meaning. The letters signify nothing but that a ship is in distress and in need of assistance. The call is used by all nations as a universal code, so that any wireless operator, regardless of the language he speaks, can immediately intercept the call of distress. Inasmuch as the call is in use by all countries, it can be seen that the signal can have no meaning in any language. The character of the code makes it a call that can be picked out easily from other signals, being composed of three dots, three dashes, three dots.—Ocean Wireless News.

The name of Captain Keayne has a secure niche in history as the founder of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery company. He was a merchant tailor and had been a member of the Honorable Artillery company of London, and his Boston company had to overcome the opposition of Governor Winthrop, who feared the establishment of a Pretorian guard. Perhaps Keayne would have failed entirely had he not been "distinguished for his piety and benevolence." In the practice of his art as a tailor he ran foul of the laws for the regulation of business and was fined £200 by the great and general court for exacting more than sixpence in the shilling profit on foreign goods. He died in Boston March 23, 1656, and his will, in which was a substantial bequest to Harvard, is one of the longest on record.—New York Sun.

A Dyak War Yell.

I was anxious to hear a Dyak war yell, and I asked the rajah to get a native to give vent to one of these sounds of gratification, heard when heads are taken by Dyaks without loss to themselves. A curious falsetto sound issued from his lips. It went higher and higher, louder and louder, something between the crowing of a cock and the whistle of a steam engine, and then it died down into a whisper. Two or three times he repeated this performance, which greatly interested me. It was not so terrible as I had imagined it must be, but the rajah explained that when heard in a chorus of thousands of men, all yelling at once, as he had heard it after successful skirmishes with the pirates, it was a most terrifying experience, and froze the blood in one's veins.—Wide World Magazine.

Just So.

"Do you think that marriage is a lottery?"

"Can't say I do. Still, everybody who marries takes a chance."—Kansas City Journal.

EUROPEAN WAR PICTURES

The Chicago Tribune secured the exclusive privilege to take motion pictures of the actual fighting in Europe by pledging to the Belgium Government 50 per cent. of the proceeds from the exhibition of the films for the relief of the sufferers in stricken Belgium. They are endorsed by the press, the pulpit and the leading educators of America as the most remarkable record of actual warfare ever produced. Many of the thrilling scenes in these remarkable pictures were taken on the firing line, with men falling on all sides and shot and shell exploding within 50 yards of the camera.

Edwin F. Weigle, famous war photographer, has brought to America the first and only authentic motion pictures of actual fighting in Europe thousands of feet of vivid film which show in wonderful awe-inspiring detail the burning of Antwerp, the destruction of Termonde, the battle of Alost, the battle of Aerschot, the flooding of Lierre, the battle of Malines and hundreds of other events which have startled the world.

The Jackson Patriot says "words cannot describe these pictures." The The genuine Chicago Tribune War pictures will be shown at the Bradley Opera House, next Monday, January 11. Mr. Arthur H. McKechnie, war correspondent for the Tribune and and with Weigle when he took the pictures will explain them as they are shown.

STOP BUYING EXPENSIVE COUGH REMEDIES

Make the Best at Home

Money spent for the old style, ready made, cough syrups in bottles holding only 2 to 2½ ounces is very largely wasted, because most of them are composed principally of sugar and water. Yet you have to pay the same price as if it was all medicine. Stop wasting this money. You can make a better cough medicine at home at one-fifth the cost. Merely go to B J. Pulver's Drug Store and ask for two ounces (50c worth) of Schiffman's Concentrated Expectorant. Mix this with one pint of granulated sugar and one-half pint of boiling water which makes a full pint (16 ounces). This new, simple, pleasant remedy is guaranteed to relieve the worst cough or cold. Also excellent for Bronchial Asthma, Bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and whooping cough. One bottle will make enough home-made cough medicine to probably last the whole family the entire winter. Children like it. It is so pleasant to take and it positively contains no chloroform, opium, morphine or other narcotics as do most cough mixtures. Keep it on hand in case of emergency and stop each cough before it gets a firm hold. The above druggist has been authorized to return the money in every single case where it does not give perfect satisfaction or is not found the best remedy ever used. Absolutely no risk is run in buying this remedy under this positive guarantee. adv

Inconsistent.

Brown—It's curious about people's beliefs. They will give entire credence to the most absurd things and put no faith whatever in the most obvious truths. Black—Yes, I've noticed it. There's Greene now. He hasn't the least confidence in hash, but he'll eat all the croquettes and mince pie you can set before him.—Exchange.

PERFECT CONFIDENCE

Tecumseh People Have Good Reason For Complete Reliance.

Do you know how—
To find relief from backache;
To correct distressing urinary ills;
To assist weak kidneys?
Your neighbors know the way—
Have used Doan's Kidney Pills;
Have proved their worth in many tests.

Here's Tecumseh testimony.

E. C. Brisbin, farmer, N. Democrat St., Tecumseh, says: "I began to suffer from kidney complaint twenty years ago and the medicine I took brought only temporary relief. Often my back ached intensely and the secretions from my kidneys were irregular in passage and highly colored. Doan's Kidney Pills went to the seat of the trouble and did me so much good that I am seldom without a supply on hand. You may continue to use my name as a reference for the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills. Whenever I feel in need of a kidney medicine, I take this remedy and its acts promptly and effectively."

Uncle Sam's Money Factory.

Uncle Sam's great money factory in Washington is one of the wonderful sights of the world. Housed in a building 580 feet long and with four wings each 285 feet deep, it takes 32,840 panes of glass to admit light to its four stories. The structure of the bureau of engraving and printing is built of Indiana limestone and it presents to the shining Potomac, which it faces, a row of columns on the front as imposing as those on the east side of the treasury.

This probably is the finest manufacturing plant in the world in point of scientific equipment to conserve the health and comfort of its inhabitants. Two of the great roofs are given over to the employees for recreation purposes, one for men and the other for the women.

A hospital equipped for surgical operations and physicians of each sex are provided. The hospital treats about forty-five patients a day for accidents and illness, but many of these troubles are of a minor character. As more than 4,000 men and women are employed in the building, some of them working nights, about 1 per cent only require medical attention.—Chicago News.

When They Mined the Nile.

In the Sudan campaign as the British troops approached Omdurman the Khalifa Abdullah conceived the idea of upsetting the British gunboat expedition by mining the Nile. A former officer of the Egyptian army whom he had long held prisoner was ordered by the khalifa to construct a couple of mines, which were produced forthwith. They were primitive in form, consisting, in fact, of two old iron boilers stuffed with gunpowder, in which was concealed a pistol with a string attached to the trigger whereby the charge could be exploded. The first mine was laid by the Ismailia, worked by a native crew, and demonstrated its efficiency by exploding on the instant, sinking the Ismailia and killing the crew, including the mine constructor.

The khalifa was delighted, not at the accident, but at the testimony to the power of the invention, and immediately ordered the emir in charge of his arsenal to lay the second mine. The ameer, profiting by experience, insured his safety by putting the Nile into the boiler before he put the boiler into the Nile. He then carried out the mission successfully, to the joy of Abdullah, who loaded him with "presents and praises."—Manchester Guardian

Cupid's Sherlock Holmes.

A prominent alienist has presumed to put love on a scientific basis. He has issued a formula by which a doubting swain may ascertain without full the name of his closest rival for "her" affections.

Here it is:

Carelessly hold "her" wrist, as it caressingly. Craftily place your forefinger on "her" pulse. Then name over in casual conversation the rivals you fear most. When you name the right one "her" pulse will jump scandalously. If it increases something like 100 beats you might as well quit the race.

To offset this mean betrayal the alienist has issued some hints to the fair sex on how to avoid nervousness. "Scorn gossip," he says, "and don't attend to other persons' business or worry over their troubles and you will be all right."

But he doesn't say a word as to how Dulcinea might have kept the fatal pulse jump from giving her away.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

NOTHING BETTER FOR WEAK WOMEN

"I Never Spent Any Money That Did Me So Much Good as That I Spent for Vinol."

Bellefontaine, Ohio.—"I wish every tired, weak, nervous woman could have Vinol for I never spent any money in my life that did me so much good as that I spent for Vinol. My nerves were in a very bad condition, making me very weak, tired, and worn out and often drowsy, headaches. I had tried cod liver oil, doctor's medicines, and other preparations without benefit.

"One day a friend asked me to try Vinol. I did and soon my appetite increased, I slept better and now I am strong, vigorous and well and can do my housework with pleasure."—Mrs. J. F. LAMBORN, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

Nervous, weak, tired, worn-out women should take Mrs. Lamborn's advice and try Vinol for there are literally thousands of men and women who were formerly run-down, weak and nervous, who owe their good health to Vinol.

It is the medicinal, tissue building elements of the cod's livers, aided by the blood making, strengthening influence of tonic iron, contained in Vinol, which makes it so efficient in all such cases.

The Bliss of Solitude

A Girl Who Wasn't Lonely and Was Lonely

By DOROTHY CANFIELD

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

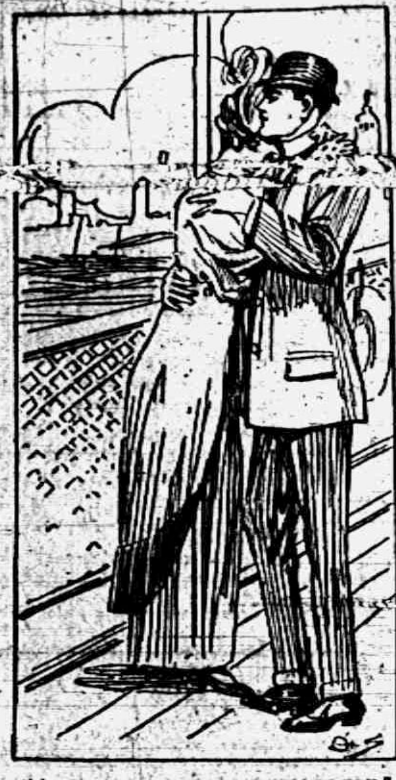
The last time I came from Europe, although I was supposed to be in charge of my pretty young niece, I did not appear on deck until the last day of the voyage. I was tired, and I knew that Puss had plenty of acquaintances on board. She is the soft eyed, appealing, helpless sort of girl who is always looked after. When I finally ascended to the upper world I was therefore both surprised and remorseful to find her looking troubled and almost distressed.

"Why, Puss, dear," I said, with a pang of compunction for my neglect, "what is the trouble? You haven't been lonely, have you, without me?"

My niece looked at me strangely for a moment and then said, with the oddest intonation:

"No, Aunt Mary, I haven't been lonely." The last word seemed to have some curious effect on her, for she repeated it. "Lonely? No, not a bit lonely."

And then she frightened me by breaking out in a hysterical laugh,



"I'VE BEEN SO LONELY WITHOUT YOU."

which ended in an equally hysterical fit of sobbing. I was so alarmed that I shook her roughly.

"Puss, stop this minute! Tell me what has happened!" I said in my sternest tones.

She only began to laugh again, choking and sobbing as she said through her handkerchief, "Well, then, I just will tell you what's the matter—so there!" She sat up, wiping her eyes, and began pouring out a rapid flood of narrative: "You see, Aunt Mary, last May—the 17th of May—Oscar Henderson asked me to marry him. You're the very first person I've told, but I don't care—I had to tell it to somebody! Well, it was the most solemn thing you can imagine—so different from just flirting, you know. I felt that I had come to a turning point in my life." She brought out the serious words with a defiant accent, as if she knew how incongruous they sounded from her childlike mouth. "I told him I couldn't decide such a terribly important thing right off, and he said to take all the time I wanted, for it was a life and death matter for him. I wanted to go off by myself, think it all quietly out and make up my mind seriously, you know, the way girls do in novels after days of solitary thought. I never took any stock in that sort of thing when I used to read about it, but then I saw all at once how necessary it is. Why, at home, with father and the boys and little Maggie to look after, and the housekeeping to do, and such strings of callers, and all the girls on the block dropping in every minute, and so many engagements for a month ahead, I didn't have a single instant to myself.

"I tried to get a little leisure there at first, but it was no use. If I went for a walk in Central park I was sure to meet somebody I knew or else one of the boys would want to go with me, and at the house the doorbell and the telephone ring all the time. I wasn't even alone in my own room, for ever since mother's death I've had Maggie there with me to keep her from missing mother so much. I kept account, finally, and found that for a whole week I wasn't alone, by actual clock time, quite three-quarters of an hour, and you can't decide the question of your life in that time.

"So I decided I'd go down to our country house ahead of the family and have a week there quite by myself. Father thought it was something awful, my going off that way, but finally he gave in on condition that one of the boys should take me down on the train. Our old caretaker met me at the station and drove me out to the house, telling me all the news of the village. I went upstairs to my room, took off my things, and for a few minutes—for five minutes at least—I was all alone. But, when I went downstairs, there, in front of the library fire, sat Sallie Prentiss—my best chum, you know—with such a pleased look on her face at the lovely surprise she had given me.

"'You old dear!' she said as she kissed me. 'Your father told me about how you felt you had to come here alone to put the house in order, and I just ran down to keep you company. We'll have a real good visit and be together every minute, just the way we used to in school.'

"Now, Aunt Mary, what could I do? Of course she stayed, and we were never out of each other's sight and went back to New York on the same train. That evening I wanted to cry. I felt so discouraged, but I couldn't even do that, for fear of scaring Maggie. Then the old life began.

"I got perfectly distracted, with Oscar waiting and with me more confused every time I looked at him. At last, one evening, I thought I saw the way out of it all. Sallie Prentiss came over to ask father if I couldn't join a party of girls who had graduated from our school and were going abroad with one of the teachers. I jumped at the chance! I'd always been crazy to go abroad, but I didn't think of that at all. It only seemed to me a way of getting away from New York and all the hundred million people who wanted me to talk with them, so I teased father till he said I could go.

"Aunt Mary"—she paused with a solemn forefinger upraised—"if you ever want to be by yourself don't go to Europe with a party of girls. Why, New York was a desert of solitude compared with that party! They're all a little bit older than I and had been abroad before, and they promised one another—I overheard them and felt like jumping overboard—that they wouldn't let dear little Puss get lonely and homesick.

"Well, of course I didn't draw a breath during the voyage that wasn't shared by the others, and when we landed in France it was just as bad. Miss Hopper wouldn't let one of us so much as stick our nose out alone, because it wasn't proper, and one of the girls always roomed with me. The only time when I wasn't supposed to be ready to talk and be sociable was when I was writing letters. I tried to use that as a pretext and would sit and just make my pen go without writing anything. But what satisfaction was there in thinking about Oscar and whether I was in love with him or not while I had to keep my pen jiggling up and down? I soon gave that up!

"Finally I gave up trying and put it off until I sailed for the trip home. I [illegible] till a later boat, and I knew you liked to be still and quiet, and I thought I'd have long days of leisure all to myself. When I said goodby to the girls in Liverpool they asked me to say honestly if I'd been lonely or homesick, and you should have heard me! I just shouted, 'Well, I should say not!' They looked so pleased—dense things!

"The passenger list scared me a little—so many names on it of people who live right near us and know me so well—but I thought maybe they'd be sick or something. I never dreamed folks could be so hatefully well! They knew me right away, and they've been laying themselves out to give me a good time. A good time!" She repeated the words with a bitterly ironic accent. "They've just tagged me around every waking minute. I declare, I've been ready to jump over the rail. There isn't anywhere you can go to get away from people on a ship. The Mason girls insisted the first night out that I should move my things into their big stateroom on the promenade deck and take the berth Ella was to have, only she decided to wait over. I begged on my bended knees to be let off, but Mrs. Mason thought it was because I was afraid of being in their way, and she wouldn't listen to me. 'No, indeed, my dear,' she said in that overbearing way she has when she wants to be kind. 'Mary Helston's daughter is like one of my own. You must come and stay with us and be like a member of our family.' Well, I was!" my niece concluded savagely. "This is the first instant I've not had a Mason of some sort hanging around me. That eldest Mason boy, the one that's in Princeton, has been trotting after me all the time his sisters left me alone. And then you come up on deck"—she began to laugh wildly again—"and ask me if I've been lonely. Why, Aunt Mary, here we are actually coming into New York—we'll be there in a few hours! I promised Oscar I'd give him his answer on the pier, and I don't know any more what to say this 23d of September than I did on the 17th of May. How can I think with such an incessant humming and buzzing in my ears every minute? I'm afraid to see Oscar. I don't feel as if I'd really recognize him when I see him, I'm so rattled."

She paused, and I opened my mouth to speak, when a great change came over her pretty, worried face. She gazed down the deck with beaming, starlike eyes, and her lips parted in an incredulous, happy smile. When she spoke her voice took on an indescribable cadence of amazed delight.

"Why, there he is now!" she exclaimed. "He must have come aboard with the customs officers. Oscar, here I am!"

It must not be supposed that she gave this information to satisfy any curiosity on my part. She was evidently only thinking aloud, for no one could have been more oblivious of my presence than she as the young man came toward her, his hands outstretched in an eager gesture of welcome. She flung herself into his arms in a passion of content, and these were the astonishing words with which she greeted him, uttered with so heartfelt an accent as to leave no possible doubt of her sincerity:

"Oh, Oscar, I've been so lonely without you!"

The Blind Need Windows.

Light has use, even if men cannot or will not see it. Baring-Gould tells of an institution for the blind that was built in England without windows. "Why," argued the committee, "should we provide windows for those that cannot see out of them?" So scientific ventilation and heating were provided, but the walls were left unpierced by any pane of glass. But soon the poor inmates grew pale, and a great languor fell upon them. They fell sick, and one or two died. Then it was that the committee decided to open windows in the walls. In came the healing light, and the human plants responded to it at once in revived spirits, ruddy cheeks and restored health. Light is good, the Light of the World is good, even for those who shut their eyes.—Christian Herald.

Scaling Fish.

A Mississippi woman tells as follows in the Woman's Home Companion how to scale fish with a minimum of discomfort:

"Scaling fish as generally done is a disagreeable task, as scales fly in every direction. I have discovered that fish may be scaled without this trouble if they are held under water in a large pan during the operation. Have just enough water to cover the fish nicely."

Sweet Return.

She (tearfully)—Henry, our engagement is at an end, and I wish to return to you everything you have ever given me.

He (cheerily)—Thanks, Blanche! You may begin at once with the kisses.

They are married now.—London Telegraph.

HALDANE SCORED BY BRITISH PRESS

Lord High Chancellor May Resign Soon, Report.

CLAIMED HE IS PRO-GERMAN

Friction May Have Been Caused by Incipient Scandal Over Date of Receipts of U. S. Note—Press Holds Him Responsible For Some Misfortunes of Army.

NEW YORK. — Last Saturday it was cabled from London that it was probable that Lord Haldane, lord high chancellor of Great Britain would resign shortly. No reason was given, but it was thought likely that the incipient scandal over the date of the receipt of President Wilson's note might have caused friction which would have forced him out. It will be remembered that Sir Edward Grey was away the day Ambassador Page delivered this note and Lord Haldane was in charge of the foreign office. The note was handed to him, Ambassador Page got his receipt, and then the news was made public. Sir Edward Grey received the note the next day, and the British press assumed that this was the first official delivery. There were charges of lack of courtesy on the part of American officials for making public the contents of the note, but Ambassador Page showed the date of his receipt and the scandal died quickly.

Says He's Pro-German.

But now comes a story by mail which shows that the British press has been openly attacking Lord Haldane as a pro-German, and accusing him of responsibility for some of the misfortunes of the army. Lord Haldane has had a distinguished public career, having been secretary of war from 1905 until he became lord high chancellor in 1912. The mail story says that the feeling against Lord Haldane, lord high chancellor, is exceedingly bitter in some quarters and several of the London newspapers have directed a bitter crusade against him.

Haldane Thrice Deceiver, Charge.

"If a man deceives you once that is his fault; if he deceives you twice that is your fault; if he deceives you three times it is because he takes you for a fool and because you are a fool. The English are not fools; they are sleepy. Our nation has been deceived three times by Lord Haldane. It was deceived about the army; it was deceived about Germany and it was deceived into thinking that 10,000 pounds a year was sufficient money to insure that the spoken word of the lord high chancellor might be implicitly trusted."

The writer calls his article an "indictment of Lord Haldane," and says that the first count against him is that when secretary of war he recommended the abolition of ten battalions of the line. This loss and the loss of the reserve which would have been created if they had not been abolished would have given Great Britain 50,000 additional trained troops to aid the expeditionary force sent into Belgium shortly after the start of the war.

Another accusation is that Lord Haldane struck out of his territorial bill the provisions for training youths in the manual.

Called North Ocean German Sea.

At another time Lord Haldane referred to the north ocean as the German ocean. Mr. White feels bitter about this.

Mr. White says further: "The second point on which Lord Haldane has forfeited the confidence of the country is in reference to the intentions of Germany. At Lord Haldane's house Ramsay MacDonald was presented to the German emperor. We know the result. If Ramsay MacDonald's anglophobia is equivalent to a reinforcement of three divisions to the Germans, what is the strategical equivalent of Lord Haldane's loyalty to the German emperor.

"On the subject of spies, Lord Haldane has misled the nation. He fears 'injustice' to Germans and spies. I fear injustice to Great Britain.

"The soldiers and officers who have died in Flanders because one battalion had to do the work of four may not be superhuman, but they were not given a dog's chance either in numbers or equipment. Nothing but the supreme ability of the generals and the magnificent unapproachable courage of the British and Irish saved them from extermination.

"Those of us who have lost friends and relations killed or broke in the war no longer desire to stand between Lord Haldane and his well earned rest. If he remains in office the next result may be a shameful peace."

REPORT KAISER HAS RELAPSE

Exposure at Front Given as Cause and He Is Rushed Back to Berlin.

AMSTERDAM. — Kaiser Wilhelm's impatient insistence to be in the thick of the fighting despite the precarious nature of his health has brought about a relapse as a result of exposure on his return to the front in Flanders, according to a dispatch from Maastricht. His condition is so serious that he has been rushed back to Berlin on the imperial train.

All military trains carrying wounded from and fresh troops to the front have been sidetracked to give the emperor's train the right of way and bring him to Berlin for treatment by his physicians with all possible speed. Traffic between Liege and Aix-la-Chapelle was held up for ten hours.

The kaiser, it is reported, is suffering from the ailment that was fatal to his father and it has been stated that an operation for cancer of the throat would be necessary.

BREITUNG PURCHASE TO TEST SHIP SALE

Allies Will Not Recognize That Dacia Has Changed Hands.

WASHINGTON — Action that is expected to result in a test of the British and French attitude toward the sale of Austrian and German merchant vessels tied up in American ports since the outbreak of the war was taken in the granting of American registry to the steam ship Dacia, formerly of the Hamburg-American line and recently purchased by Edward N. Breitung of Michigan.

The admission of the Dacia to American registry was granted by the department of commerce after all of the facts regarding her purchase had been laid before officials here. It is proposed to send the Dacia to Bremen in about two weeks with a cargo of cotton from Galveston. She is now at Port Arthur, Tex.

The expectation here is that the Dacia will promptly be seized by British or French cruisers as soon as she appears in European waters. It is believed that the British and certainly the French will enter the case before a prize court on the ground that she is an enemy vessel, her sale after the outbreak of hostilities being void. Thus a test case will be instituted and inasmuch as similar questions are involved in the president's ship purchase plan it is likely the proceedings anticipated in the case of the Dacia will have unusual interest and significance here. It is understood the purchasers of the Dacia are expecting this result of the transaction.

In order to insure the companies against loss on other byproducts and to insure the plants running night and day, the British government is to pay 100 per cent more than the usual price for the chemicals it desires. A similar contract also was made with the Sunnyside Chemical company of Jennings, owned by Mitchell Brothers.

MORE OF PLUMBING OCTOPUS

Charges Plumbers' Trust in Grand Rapids; May Sue City.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. — Charging that because he is not a member of the "plumbers' trust," he has been discriminated against by the local board of health, Carl Zarboek threatens to sue the city of Grand Rapids for tearing up plumbing work done by him.

Zarboek has been refused a plumber's license several times by the plumbers' examining board. Pleading his case before the claims committee of the city council, Zarboek alleged that he was refused a license, because he does work cheaper than the "plumbing trust." Zarboek was recently arrested for digging up the streets without a permit. His case is now pending in the police court.

NO DRUNKARDS AT U. OF M.

ANN ARBOR, MICH. — During the year just passed not a single student in the University of Michigan has been arrested for drunkenness. This is a record that has not been attained at Michigan before in half a century.

It is said to be a wonderful tribute to the stand of the chief executive officer of the university, President H. B. Hutchins, who has sought with all his might to put down drinking in the university.

RUSSIANS FAIL IN CRACOW ATTACKS

British Lose 100 In Air Raid on Reserve Supply Base.

4 ALLIES' SHIPS ARE SUNK

Eight Hungarian Townships Held by Russian Army and Several Divisions of Foe Cornered, Says Petrograd—Fighting in Alsace and Along Heights of Meuse Continues.

The correspondent of the Zeitung Am Mittag at Austrian headquarters says the Russians are conducting violent frontal attacks on the Austrian positions along the Dunajec River east of Cracow and are bending every effort to push toward the fortress, which has been their goal for two months. These attacks have been repulsed with heavy losses.

German aviators successfully dropped explosive bombs on the British reserve ammunition stores in the outskirts of Koudekerke, near Dunkirk, France, destroying the ammunition and killing or wounding 100 soldiers. Several buildings were set on fire.

The German steamship Otavi has landed at Las Palmas, Canary Islands, a hundred sailors transferred to her by the German auxiliary cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm, representing the crews of four French and British vessels captured and sunk by the warship. These craft were the French steamer Mont Agel, sunk Dec. 4; the British steamer Bellevue, sunk on the same day; the French sailing vessel Annie Marie, sunk on Sept. 17, and the French ship Union, sunk on Nov. 22.

A Petrograd dispatch published in l'Information reports that the Russians have occupied eight Hungarian townships and that several divisions of the Austrian army are surrounded in the Carpathians.

PARIS — Although the weather is improving there has been only minor fighting along the northern battle front. Latest reports indicate the Germans are concentrating for a new offensive to the east and southeast of Ypres and La Bassee. Fresh troops have been brought up, supported by artillery, and it is believed that as soon as the inundated area freezes solid a forward movement will be attempted.

Meanwhile the fighting continues in Alsace. In the vicinity of Steinbach positions have been taken and retaken as many as half a dozen times. The latest reports received indicated a substantial gain for the French troops. However, both sides are being strongly re-enforced and there are indications that the fighting in this vicinity has only begun.

The intensely cold weather is interfering seriously with operations. It is almost impossible to move artillery through the mountain passes, and as a result most of the fighting is now confined to infantry encounters.

Along the heights of the Meuse the artillery duel continues without interruption. Both sides are so strongly intrenched that frontal assaults by infantry are out of the question.

Naval Battle on Vistula Certain.

PETROGRAD — Naval battles on the Vistula are now certain. The Germans, apparently taking a leaf out of the Russian book, have armored and armed river steamers in the Vyshegrad region. The Russians already have steamers in action here, having used them to prevent the Germans forcing a crossing from the island which is in the middle of the river at this point.

It is believed here the Germans are hopeful of forcing a crossing under protection of the guns of their steamers and the Russians have sent additional craft to attack them and prevent this.

Pass Report Success.

Russian success is reported from south of Plock on the Gorlice road. The Germans attacked in force, but were trapped in a woods and forced to retreat with a loss of many prisoners and a machine gun.

The fighting in the Caucasus continues with the Russians regaining the advantage. Following an all-day fight at Ardagan, the Turkish positions were carried at the point of the bayonet and are now in the possession of the Russians who are strongly fortifying them. The battle of Sarykamysh continues with a slight gain for the Russians. It is not likely, however, that a decisive result will be attained for several days.

Anti-Segregation Act Valid.

SAN FRANCISCO — Three federal judges, sitting as a special court, sustained the constitutionality of the "red light" abatement act, passed by the California legislature and ratified by the people. The decision will be carried on appeal to the supreme court of the United States.

Twelve Reported Killed in Wreck.

WACO, TEXAS — Twelve are reported dead in the wreck of a limited passenger train on the Missouri, Kansa and Texas railway twelve miles south of Denison.

No Cause For Worry.

Mrs. Blank had secured a new and most excellent cook, and, having lost several equally good cooks through the subtle workings of Cupid, she was a little disturbed when she came across her valued Amanda walking in the park with a man. The next day she said to Amanda:

"I saw you walking in the park with a gentleman yesterday afternoon, Amanda. I hope he will not be taking you away from me some day."

"La, ma'am, don't you be skeered none about that!" replied Amanda. "In the first place he ain't no gentleman, an' in the next place he's my husband. Don't you worry none, ma'am."—New York Post.

He Got There.

The man was reading the front page of the newspaper as he walked across the busy street.

"Gee," he mused, "I'd like to get my name in big type on the front page of a newspaper."

Just then a street car bumped into the man.

But he missed the story.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

The Market in Cauls.

We believe that there is still some market for cauls among sailors who retain their belief in the efficacy of these membranes as a protection against shipwreck and drowning. Notices of "Cauls For Sale Within" were to be seen recently in windows in the vicinity of the docks of both London and Liverpool, but it is some time since we have noticed an advertisement of a caul for sale in the daily press. It may be remarked that the sale of cauls, so far from being a very ancient custom, is a comparatively modern innovation. The witchcraft of the middle ages declared against the caul retaining any virtue whatever if parted with by gift or sale to any but a member of the child's kindred.—London Lancet.

The Struggle.

The road to eminence and power from an obscure condition ought not to be made too easy nor a thing too much of course. If rare merit be the rarest of all things it ought to pass through some sort of probation. The temple of honor ought to be seated on an eminence. If it be open through virtue let it be remembered, too, that virtue is never tried but by some difficulty and some struggle.—Burke.

THIRTY-FIVE YEARS AGO

Jan. 8, 1880

Our January thaw has arrived.

This warm weather is rather depressing on the pork market.

Ezra F. Blood and his estimable lady will celebrate their golden wedding on Monday evening January 12.

A certain Tecumseh dressmaker got the right buttons on the wrong dress the other day. The dress was of modern style and had something less than a gross of buttons on it, which made the task of righting the wrong buttons rather a monotonous one.

Wm. Hayden received three letters from across the water last week asking quotations on his flour, one from Amsterdam, one from Anners and the third from Leith, Scotland, which is only 15 miles from Dundee where the Taybridge disaster occurred.

F. L. Hicks is home for a few days. He is handling the Howe scales, operating in Kent and Ionia counties. He received a telegram from his brother J. F. Hicks, while at home, stating that he had closed a sale of Howe scales amounting to $2175 to one from outside of the regular trade of platform scales.

Tecumseh was highly complimented at the meeting of the State Teachers' Association in Lansing last week. Prof. Spencer of this village was chosen secretary of the association and Prof C. B. Thomas of Saginaw, who was elected president, was a former superintendent of the Tecumseh schools.

THE LEAP YEAR BALL.

The ladies leap year party has come and gone and it is no exaggeration to say that it equalled any party ever given in Tecumseh and surpassed the most sanguine expectations of the committee in charge. The following committees had charge of the arrangements:

Floor—Mesdames H. E. Stout, A. Blackman, J. W. Patterson and Thos Adamson.

Reception—Misses Jennie Root, Grace DeWolf, Mamie Monaghan and Mrs. W. F. Baxter.

Invitations—Misses Lulu Lilley and Bertha DeWolf.

Music by Hull & Arnold's Constantine band. The supper was served by W. H. Sink of the Pioneer Hotel. About 50 couple participated in the dance.

Among those from abroad were Ira Wolcott and lady, Jas. A. H. Bell, Miss Lizzie Brown and Tribou LeBaron of Toledo, Miss Mockridge of Coldwater, Miss VanCourt of Detroit, C. C. Dell and Miss Bartlett from Clinton.

Not the Same Thing.

"I hear young Sprigkins has taken a partner for life."

"Not necessarily, but he's married."—Livingston Lance.

Happy thou that learnedst from another's griefs, not to subject thyself to the same.—Tibullus.

MOTION PICTURES SHOW WHAT WAR IS

No one who pretends even a casual interest in what is happening in the world can afford to overlook the opportunity being brought home at the Atheneum of seeing with his own eyes what has been happening in Belgium and to Belgium in the European war. The motion pictures taken by Edwin F. Weigle, a Chicago Tribune staff photographer, and authorized by the Belgian government in an agreement by which half the net profits of the [illegible] go to the Belgian Red Cross society, are on exhibition at the theatre. They were shown there yesterday and close today with four presentations—at 2:30, 4:00, 7:30 and 9 o'clock.

It would require columns of space to clearly describe the many phases of the war and Belgium's condition that are so vividly shown, while great space than is available would be required to merely enumerate them.

There are four reels of the pictures, and in a hundred different ways they so clearly prove themselves genuine there can be no question on that score. Accompanying the pictures is a lecture—or perhaps more properly, explanatory remarks—by Arthur McKechnie, an experienced newspaper man and war correspondent who was with Mr. Weigle in Belgium and was present when many of the pictures were taken.

From a spectacular standpoint, undoubtedly the most notable thing in the pictures is an intimate view of a small band of Belgians whose desperate defense held off an overwhelming force of Germans at the outskirts of Antwerp for more than 9 hours. The camera was within fifty feet of the defenders, and during the portion of the fighting photographed the deaths of two men clearly shown as the German bullets cut them down.

However, even the spectacular loses its impressiveness in comparison with those records of the camera which show the hopelessness of the fleeing refugees. One scene shows the women and little children fleeing in haste from their native city. Another shows refugees crossing the boundary line into neutral Holland. And the man or women who looks at these scenes and can surpress a lump in the throat and a dampening of the eyes is something less than the normal human. The tragedy of those hopeless figures, carrying the only earthly belongings they had a chance to save, and more particularly of the innocent children, separated sometimes from parents and left to hurry on, to know not where, brings home all to vividly the need of America's proferred charity which must have come as a slight ray to live for whom little cheer remains.

Too many are the impressions gained from the pictures to be set down here. They show many, many phases of modern warefare; things well described in the news reports are made more clear: they show the havoc wrought in the many Belgian cities which the war has hit hardest; they show the extreme youth of Belgian soldiery; some of war's hardships are shown and many more intimated. Mr. McKechnie explained that the reason they had been able to get such intimate and accurate pictures, and such a variety of them, was the working agreement with the Belgian government. Instead of interfering with them and hindering them as the governments have done with newspaper men, correspondents and photographers, officials had done everything possible to make the intimate work possible.

The above article was taken from the "Jackson Patriot" of Sunday Jan. 3. The genuine Tribune War pictures will be shown at the Bradley Opera House, Tecumseh, next Monday January 11. Seats will be on sale at Hays bakery, tomorrow (Saturday) morning at 8:00 a. m. As there has been a great many requests for seats they will undoubtly sell fast. Get yours early.

He Wanted to Know.

"Didn't you say," demanded the young man of the captain, "that this ship was equipped with all appliances for human safety?"

"I did."

"Then how does it happen that I now find myself engaged to a lady I did not know when the vessel left her pier?"—Judge.

DIPPING THE DIPS

This blessed country of ours has been dipping the dips in a business way the past two months. Consequently, it is somewhat dizzy; but it is better to be that, than to get into the mess in which Europe has been plunged.

We have slid down some terrifying declivities—and we have had to hold tight to the Car of Common Sense to keep from falling overboard into the midst of that other mess. But we are still on the tracks and the dips are getting less worrisome.

The thing to do just now is not to yell, not to gloom, and not to think the world is absolutely coming to an end. America is safe and sane; and every one of us, north, south, east and west, owes it to himself and his neighbor to stick to the job of being sensible! Ex

Right and Wrong Censoring

But what the American press is complaining about is that the British censorship is turning from a military into a political one. American journalists have the right to assert that it is beyond the functions of a foreign censor to say whether Americans shall or shall not receive news of a Papal letter; whether they shall be given a falsified account of a speech by the President of France, and whether there is any news from Germany which British censors have a right to suppress. Wars are not won in this way, particularly when the mails are open and German letters and newspapers arrive with amazing regularity by way of Holland and Italy.

The favorable opinion of the United States is being courted as never before in its history, but that public opinion is not to be won by falsifications on either side. And there have been misrepresentations on the Germans side, too. In deed, if the Associated Press had carried out a recent plan to expose at length the London suppression and mishandling of the news, public statement as to England in this country would have been unfavorably affected to a considerable extent.—From "The Press as Affected by the War," by Oswald Garrison Villard, in the American Reviews for January.

Just Goes Out.

STOP BUYING EXPENSIVE COUGH REMEDIES

Make the Best at Home

Money spent for the old style, ready made, cough syrups in bottles holding only 2 to 2½ ounces is very largely wasted, because most of them are composed principally of sugar and water. Yet you have to pay the same price as if it was all medicine. Stop wasting this money. You can make a better cough medicine at home at one-fifth the cost. Merely go to B. J. Pulver's Drug Store and ask for two ounces (50c worth) of Schiffman's Concentrated Expectorant. Mix this with one pint of granulated sugar and one-half pint of boiling water, which makes a full pint (16 ounces). This new, simple, pleasant remedy is guaranteed to relieve the worst cough or cold. Also excellent for Bronchial Asthma, Bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and whooping cough. One bottle will make enough home-made cough medicine to probably last the whole family the entire winter. Children like it. It is so pleasant to take and it positively contains no chloroform, opium, morphine or other narcotics as do most cough mixtures. Keep it on hand in case of emergency and stop each cough before it gets a firm hold. The above druggist has been authorized to return the money in every single case where it does not give perfect satisfaction or is not found the best remedy ever used. Absolutely no risk is run in buying this remedy under this positive guarantee. adv

Teaching Cubs to Kill.

Have you ever seen a cat catch a mouse and hand it over to her kittens to teach them how to kill? Well, a tiger is merely a big cat, and she teaches her cubs almost in the same way, only not with mice. An East Indian officer witnessed a scene of this kind. An old bull bison had been the victim, and the tigress had disabled him by breaking one of his forelegs just below the knee. She never touched the throat, the usual place of seizing, but allowed the cubs to worry the disabled animal. The eyewitness relates that the cubs acted exactly like kittens, advanced and retreated and worried the victim, all the time mewing and snarling, while the tigress sat near by, watching their antics and occasionally giving the bison a blow with her paw when he showed undue activity.

The Element of Chance.

Human progress might be otherwise defined as human success in minimizing the element of chance. In science there is substitution of exactitude for the primitive accidents of the rule of thumb, just as in philosophy and morals, truth and untruth, right and wrong, are being unswathed from their veils of uncertainty and set clearly in opposition to each other. In other words, the gambling spirit in life is less and less countenanced, and gaming, once fashionable, is now taboo even in the most innocent forms.—New Orleans Times-Picayune.

PERFECT CONFIDENCE

Tecumseh People Have Good Reason For Complete Reliance.

Do you know how—
To find relief from backache;
To correct distressing urinary ills;
To assist weak kidneys?
Your neighbors know the way—
Have used Doan's Kidney Pills;
Have proved their worth in many tests.

Here's Tecumseh testimony.

E. C. Brisbin, farmer, N. Democrat St., Tecumseh says; "I began to suffer from kidney complaint twenty years ago and the medicine I took brought only temporary relief. Often my back ached intensely and the secretions from my kidneys were irregular in passage and highly colored. Doan's Kidney Pills went to the seat of the trouble and did me so much good that I am seldom without a supply on hand. You may continue to use my name as a reference for the merit of Doan's Kidney Pills. Whenever I feel in need of a kidney medicine, I take this remedy and its acts promptly and effectively."

For Men and Women

Backache? Feel tired? Not so spry as you used to be? Getting old? Many persons mistake kidney trouble for advancing age. Kidneys out of order make you feel old before your time. Foley Kidney Pills tone up and invigorate the kidneys, banish backache, rid your blood of acids and poisons. Sold by all druddists of Tecumseh. adv

A Member of The Rebeccas
A Bad Case of Nasal Catarrh Cured By Pe-ru-na.

That any case of nasal catarrh can be cured by an internal medicine is denied by some. Only a glance at our files would be necessary to convince any sane person that catarrh can be cured by the internal use of Peruna.

Mrs. Victoria Pickel, of Columbus, is a case of this sort. She had nasal catarrh very badly, and was cured by Peruna. We will let her tell her own story. Mrs. Victoria M. Pickel, 130 E. Mound Street, Columbus, Ohio, writes:

"I have been using Peruna for catarrh, having had a very aggravated case, so bad that it clogged the nasal organs. When I did get the nasal organs opened, the mucus would drop into my throat and make me very sick.

"A friend advised me to take Peruna, and after using four bottles I was cured. I have no trouble now, and am happy to say that I am enjoying the best of health and attending to my lodge duties, being a member of the Rebecca Lodge of Odd Fellows.

"I would recommend Peruna to those suffering with the same obnoxious trouble."

NOTHING BETTER FOR WEAK WOMEN
"I Never Spent Any Money That Did Me So Much Good as That I Spent for Vinol."
Bellefontaine, Ohio.—"I wish every tired, weak, nervous woman could have Vinol for I never spent any money in my life that did me so much good as that I spent for Vinol. My nerves were in a very bad condition, making me very weak, tired, and worn out and often drowsy headaches. I had tried cod liver oil, doctor's medicines, and other preparations without benefit.
"One day a friend asked me to try Vinol. I did and soon my appetite increased, I slept better and now I am strong, vigorous and well and can do my housework with pleasure."—Mrs. J. F. LAMBORN, Bellefontaine, Ohio.
Nervous, weak, tired, worn-out women should take Mrs. Lamborn's advice and try Vinol for there are literally thousands of men and women who were formerly run-down, weak and nervous, who owe their good health to Vinol.
It is the medicinal, tissue building elements of the cod's livers, aided by the blood making, strengthening influence of tonic iron, contained in Vinol, which makes it so efficient in all such cases.

A Stagecoach Romance

It Contrasted With Travel in These Latter Days

By THOMAS R. DAWN

A gentleman riding in a luxurious parlor car on the Central Pacific railroad read a novel which appeared to bore him, closed it, yawned, cast a glance through the window, yawned again and was about to settle himself for a nap when a white bearded septuagenarian in the chair next to him said:

"Dull traveling nowadays, isn't it?"

The bored man looked at the other as much as to say, "I have no acquaintance with you, sir, and I don't wish any." Then he grunted an assent and was settling himself further for slumber when the old man continued:

"When I traveled as a youngster there was something to keep a fellow awake. At ten years of age I went from Pittsburgh across the Allegheny mountains, part way by stage, part way by canal and the rest on a snorting steamboat on a river. On that canalboat there wasn't any porcelain bowl to wash up as there is on this car. There were only a tin wash basin and a piece of bar soap, with a roller towel to wipe on. But there was something better than there is here.

"SHE HAD ME COVERED."

There were two of the most eminent lecturers in the United States aboard, and one evening they both gave the passengers a talk."

The man who was obliged to take all this made a virtue of necessity and listened.

"I've crossed the prairies of Illinois in a stagecoach with a party the members of which had never seen one another before starting and before the end of the trip became friends for life. One man who had a stentorian voice said he never felt he had room enough to sing except when he was on what was then called the grand prairie of Illinois. We turned in, sitting straight up as we were, about 10 o'clock and were jarred from side to side and jolted up and down all night. But after the first night we slept well and were ready to crack jokes at one another in the morning. There were two matrimonial matches made on that trip. Curious, wasn't it? The parties had no acquaintance before."

A rough looking man not quite so old, sitting in a seat opposite, had been listening to this contrast between the old and new methods of travel and at this point spoke up:

The old man acquiesced. The other passenger looked as if he would like to call the conductor and have both men put off the train as nuisances.

"I don't look like a man as has had a romance, do I?" the third party went on. "I was better lookin' before a feller went gunnin' for me in the Alhambra gamblin' saloon at Cheyenne in 1868 and give me the scar. You talk about travelin' furder east in the forties and fifties. You didn't hev no sich places to stop as Cheyenne when it was the terminal of the U. P. And as for your canalboats, with lecturers on 'em, they couldn't 'a' been as lively as a stagecoach with road agents stoppin' the way and linin' up the passengers for their valuables. I was sittin' on the box with the driver of a coach one day—the inside was empty—when right out on the plain, where there wa'n't anything but cactus and gopher holes—not a tree or even a shrub to shade her—we come up with the purtiest gal I ever see walkin' in the hot sun. She looked awful tired and hot, and I suggested to the driver to take her up. He said if she wanted to ride she'd have to pay her fare. I asked her why she was walkin', and she said she hadn't no money; she'd run away from home on account of a stepmother and was tryin' to get to some civilised town where she could locate and make a livin'.

"The upshot of it was I agreed to pay her fare, and she got inside. The money wa'n't nothin' to me, seein' I'd just raked in some $3,000 at faro, and I didn't mind a little sum like that when a purty gal was concerned. The tears almost come into her eyes when she thanked me for doin' of it, and I wished I had some excuse to give her a lot more.

"Waal, after a spell I climbed down and got inside the coach. The old coachin' days in the east back in the forties might 'a' been sociable, but I reckon a feller seldom had a coach all to hisself with a purty gal. And mebbe there wa'n't nothin' to start a love affair on one o' them Illinois or Allegheny mounting rides. In my case there was a mighty big favor to start one. A gal as has jist been saved from walkin' on an alkali plain in the hot sun and transferred to the leather seat of a stagecoach is in a mighty good condition to be made love to by the man as done it.

"She told the pitifulest story of that stepmother o' hers I ever heered. It almost made me weep. I couldn't understand how the gal could 'a' stood it, or, rather, would 'a' stood it, seein that she wa'n't no measly, bony little thing, but a real strappin', strong girl.

"Suddint it occurred to me that this was a good chance for me to reform and settle down. I tole the girl about myself and offered if she'd marry a galoot I'd quit gamblin', put the money I had in my pocket into stockin' a store and we'd be as happy as two turtledoves. She said it was awful suddint, but seein' she didn't know what on airth she was goin' to do—here she covered her face with her handkerchief and blubbered—she reckoned she'd better take up with me even if I was a stranger. I kissed her and promised to make her a good husband. Then she cried a leetle more and said such a generous man deserved a wife that would be kind to him and she'd devote the hull of her life to me.

"There's somepin I heered about 'a ruling passion,' and I reckon I had one on 'em in them days. I got tired o' lyremakin' after awhile, jist as some married pursons want to come home and stop foolin' before the honeymoon has come to an end. Happenin' to put my hand in my coat pocket, I felt a pack of keerds and, takin' 'em out, asked the gal if she knowed any game. She said she'd never seen any keerds before. I allowed I'd teach her a leetle poker, and, she sittin' on the back seat and I on the front, we made a table o' the middle one. I loaned her some money to begin on.

"She was so stupid about it and played so bad, bettin' when she hadn't nothin' and layin' down a full hand, that I soon won all I'd lent her. She said if I'd try it ag'in she thort she could do better, so I loaned her some more money, and we went on with the game. This time she did better, although she was mighty stupid.

"'Nothin',' I answered.

"'Two kings?'

"'Not very much.'

"'Five kings?'

"'There ain't no sich thing.'

"'Well,' she said, 'I'm goin' to bluff this time.'

"I thort I'd show her that it didn't pay to tell she was goin' to bluff, and, havin' three aces, I went for her. After she'd exhausted what I'd loaned her she borryed some more and raised me, and kep' borryin' and raisin' till there was a big pot on the table. When I thort I'd done enough to give her a good lesson I called her.

"D'ye know, that gal held four kings and cleaned me outen $400. I larfed and thort I'd show her, how easy it would be to win it all back, and I started in. In an hour she had my pile in her bag.

"'My dear,' I said, 'seein' I tuck you into this yere coach out o' the broilin' sun and paid yer fare and considerin' that I lent you the fust stake, I reckon you'll not refuse to lend me somepin to start in with to get revenge?'

"'No,' she said, 'I better not. Seein' you're goin' to be my husband and I've got to reform you, I'd better hold on to any cash that comes into my hands. Your passion for gamblin' mought git the better o' yer in spite o' all yer good resolutions.'

"I don't like to spile yer idee o' this yer stagecoach romance by tellin' the rest o' it, 'cause it degenerated from a love affair to a draw, not a draw in a game o' poker, but a draw after a game o' poker, the difference bein' that the article drawed wasn't a keerd, but a weepon. I was so got darned disgusted with the gal that I tole her I wouldn't trouble her to keep my cash as my sweetheart or my wife nuther and she could jist turn over the winnin's.

"She answered that the days when wimmen knuckled down to men was over and she proposed to stand for her rights. With that she tuk her hand from under a jacket she wore, and before I could say Jack Robinson she had me covered.

"'Up with yer hands, y' measly galoot,' she hollered, 'or I'll bore a hole through that stupid skull o' yours.'

"'Who be you, anyway?' I asked.

"'Jimmie the Kid!'

"My brain become illuminated suddint. Jimmie the Kid was a desperado with a face and voice as soft as a gal's. He had lots o' ways o' doin' strangers, but his favorite one was the gal racket. I knowed that my money was gone and if I give the feller any [illegible] I'd go up too.

"'I reckon you kin walk the rest o' the way,' he said. 'Walkin' was good enough fer me, and it's good enough fer my husband that is to be. Seein' the wimmen is gettin' the upper hand, I've calculated to be one of 'em myself.'

"Openin' the door, he told me to git, and I got."

Smallpox Closes Hancock Movies.

HANCOCK, MICH. — The health department of Hancock ordered all moving picture theaters to close because of an epidemic of smallpox. It affects four theaters, including the Kerredge, the finest theater in the upper peninsula for film performances. Flesh and blood actors will be allowed to show, not because they are less liable to smallpox than moving picture actors, but because fewer children patronize them. The schools of the city, which have been closed for the Christmas vacation, will be closed at least another week.

Wife is Dead; Husband Dying

KALAMAZOO, MICH. — Mrs. Henry F. Giddings is dead at her home after a long illness and her husband lies in Bronson near death. His condition is so critical that relatives have deemed it advisable not to tell him of his wife's death. Mrs. Giddings, who was a former resident of Augusta, was ill before her husband went to the hospital, although it was believed she would recover.

Getting Even.

Susie's grandmother had been scolding her. Susie felt indignant, but had been taught never to "answer back." However, she got even. Taking her kitten in her arms, she thus soliloquized:

"Kitty, I wish one of us was dead this minute. Not you, kitty nor me, kitty, but one of us three in this room."—Exchange.

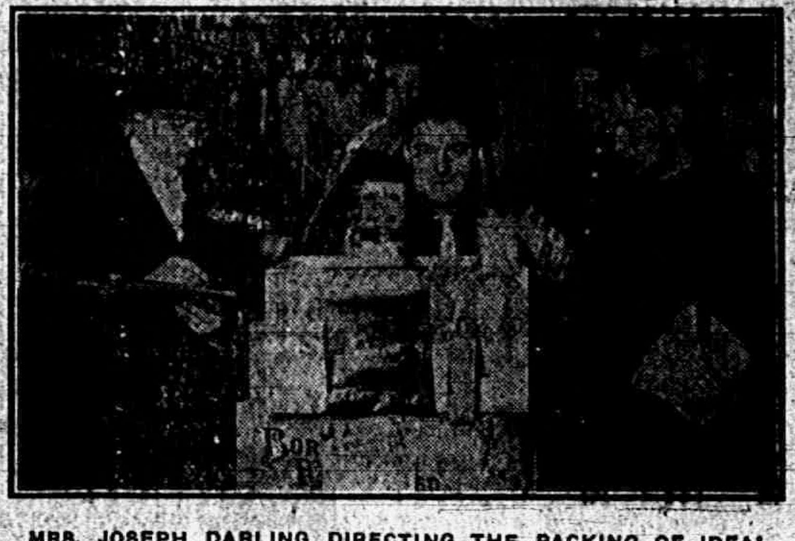
Dr. Wiley Prepares an Ideal Food Box For Starving Belgium

New Plan of Relief Suggested by Washington Woman---How You Can Aid the Stricken Little Sister of the World

By WILL IRWIN



MRS. JOSEPH DARLING DIRECTING THE PACKING OF IDEAL FOOD BOXES.

THIS is going to be a pretty hard winter in America. The war in Europe has disturbed business in every direction. We have a few hungry people ourselves. And yet Belgium, a brave little, thrifty little nation of 7,000,000 people, is going to starve to death this winter unless America feeds the Belgians. How are we going to take care both of our own and of the "stricken little sister of the world?"

A woman solved the problem. Mrs. Joseph Darling of Washington had been knitting stockings and scarfs for European war sufferers until it occurred to her that she might be using her brains as well as her fingers. She sat down forthwith and thought out the idea of "food boxes for Belgium." Mrs. Darling saw Dr. Harvey Wiley, who laid out the ideal food boxes for Belgian relief, and their plan has now been taken up by the woman's section of the commission for relief in Belgium, of which Mrs. Lindon Bates is chairman.

Dr. Wiley's box for Belgian adults, as slightly revised to get its weight inside the parcel post regulations, is as follows: Three No. 3 tins of beans, three No. 1 tins of pink Alaska salmon, one five-pound sack of rolled oats, one five-pound sack of yellow cornmeal, one five-pound sack of yellow split peas, one two-pound sack of granulated sugar, one three-pound sack of California prunes, one seven-pound sack of wheat flour, one one-pound sack of salt, one can opener, one box.

That, however, is only a guide to the kind of food which the Belgians need. It is intended mainly for such Americans as can afford to go and order boxes from the grocer. Belgium wants any kind of food which will stand ocean transportation, which excludes fresh fruit and vegetables.

The commission for relief in Belgium has arranged with the postoffice department to transmit all Belgian relief foodstuffs free of cost to the donor. If you put your name and address on the package and add the letter "B" the money expended for stamps will be refunded by the commission. The package should weigh not less than twenty pounds and not more than fifty.

Packages mailed from MICHIGAN should be addressed to CENTRAL WAREHOUSE COMPANY, SAGINAW; GRAND RAPIDS ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE, GRAND RAPIDS; who are collecting agents for this district.

CENSUS OF DEAF BEING TAKEN

Flint, Mich., Jan. 11.—Under the direction of Luther L. Wright, superintendent of the Michigan School for the Deaf, a census of the deaf of the the state is now being taken.

The figures are not yet complete, but Mr. Wright estimates that his average attendance will be increased by about 200 within the next two years. The school now has 320 students enrolled. When Mr. Wright took office a year ago it had about 270. From figures now on file it is said that the increase in attendance will far exceed the average yearly growth.

Tennessee's Marbles.

Although marble is the most important product of Knoxville, Tenn., there being thirty-five mills and quarries in the city district, producing values which have reached $3,000,000 a year, the great variety and value of Tennessee's marble deposits were unknown until 1853. Between that year and 1857 the two large additions of the capitol at Washington, wherein the United States senate and the house of representatives sit, were built of this marble. The beautiful East Tennessee variegated marble is the material of which the desks of the president of the senate and the speaker of the house as well as the railing of the stairway leading from the first floor of the capitol to the galleries of the house, were built.—Argonaut.

BRIDE QUITS HUBBY AFTER THREE WEEKS

He Charges She Married for Mercenary Reasons Only.

Ypsilanti, Mich., Jan. 11.—After three weeks of married life Mrs. Eunice Beach consulted an attorney and signed a bill of complaint asking that her marriage be dissolved.

Dec. 19 last she went to Detroit, met her husband, Irving Beach, the first time. They went to Ann Arbor, obtained a marriage license and at 3:46 p. m. the same day married. The meeting was brought about through the medium of a matrimonial paper, it is said.

The following week Beach had his little farm of five acres east of the city deeded to his wife and himself jointly. When the deed was recorded Mrs. Beach, it is asserted, left her husband and told him not to follow her. Beach stated today that she asked him how much he would give her to sign off. He refused to give her anything. He said his wife simply married him for what she could get from him.

In the bill of complaint Beach alleged that when they returned from their honeymoon, his wife informed him his duties would be to do all the chamber work, go after liquors and act as janitor. What grounds upon which Mrs. Beach bases her bill of complaint is not known.

ITALY STIRRED OVER LYNCHING

Complications Are Threatened with Austria.

ONE ITALIAN HANGS ANOTHER

It is Claimed Military Authorities of Dalmatia Compelled Him to Do It—French and Germans Report Counter Attacks and Repulses In the West.

Rome, Jan. 11.—Complications between Italy and Austria are threatened as a result of an incident at Gravosa, chief harbor of Gravosa in Dalmatia.

The military authorities of Gravosa compelled an Italian subject named Itini to hang a fellow Italian subject who was accused of treason. The Italian residents thereupon threatened to lynch Itini, who fled to Ancona, where he was arrested and mobbed and nearly lynched by the indignant citizens. He now is awaiting trial on a charge of murder. Meanwhile the case is under diplomatic investigation.

Positions Maintained, Says Paris.

"From the sea to the Oise there has been an artillery duel. On the Aisne, in the region of Soissons, the enemy has not been able in spite of numerous attacks to recover the trenches which he lost. At the end of the day he renewed the bombardment of Soissons.

"In Champagne, from Rheims to the Argonne, our artillery has maintained a very effective fire on the German trenches, dispersing at many points groups of sappers. The positions which we charged at Perthes Les Hurlus, around the village, have been organized. A counter attack by the enemy west of Perthe was repulsed. On the border of the farm at Beausejour we have accomplished an advance at two points, winning some ground to the west and capturing a field work to the north.

"In the Argonne, the enemy bombarded the region of Four Deparis. We replied to the fire and destroyed a German block house. The enemy's efforts to capture hill 263 are continuing. To the west of Boureuilles all our positions have been maintained. Between the Argonne and the Meuse there is nothing new to report.

"On the heights of the Meuse, in the forest of Apremont, an attack by the enemy broke down under the fire of our artillery. In the Vosges, northwest of Watweiler (Alsace) and in the region of Thann we have likewise repulsed the enemy's attacks."

Says Night Was Calm.

Paris, Jan. 11.—The official communique issued at 10:30 at night says:

"In the Champagne district at night two German counter attacks, one north of Perthes, the other north of Beausejour, were repulsed.

"In the Argonne two slight attacks by the enemy failed at Fontain Madame and St. Huber.

"Rifle fire was directed against hill 263 (west of Boureilles) and on Russiat-Des-Meurissons, but no attack were made.

"On the rest of the front the night was calm."

Says French Attacks Failed.

Berlin, Jan. 11.—The German war office gave out an official statement declaring that French attacks to recapture the village of Burnhaupt-Le-Haut, Alsace, at night, had failed. It is stated also that onslaughts by the French near Nieuport, Belgium, northeast of Soissons, France, and near Perthes-Les-Hurlus, all were repulsed by the kaiser's troops. A battle is now raging at the town of Soissons, the statement says. In the Argonne, it is asserted that the Germans have gained ground, while the fighting near Apremont, north of Toul, is described as indecisive. According to the German announcement, the battle at Burnhaupt-Le-Haut has been one of great violence. Great numbers of killed or wounded are reported as lying on the field of combat and in the neighboring woods."

Grand Rapids Fire Starts Row Among City Officials.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 11.—Following the disastrous fire that wrecked the St. Andrew's school and the Catholic Central high school charges are made that the latter structure could have been saved had the firemen known of conditions within the building. It is said inefficient fire inspection service left the department ignorant that the "fire wall" between the two buildings was a wooden partition.

Officials of the school had informed the firemen when the blaze started that a brick wall separated the buildings. This, however, did not extend to the roof. Heads of the department have been attacked for alleged inefficiency in handling the fire.

An Army Campaign

It Was Planned and Executed by Women

By F. A. MITCHEL

Colonel Edgar Garrison was a soldier from the crown of his head to the sole of his feet. He considered his profession the noblest of all and contended that nothing should be permitted to creep into the army to destroy its efficiency. He looked with concern upon the many weddings that were taking place among the officers and declared that unless the matrimonial fever were checked the army would become useless except for show purposes.

"What is a soldier intended for?" he would say. "To be killed. He is paid to hold himself in readiness by the government for that especial purpose. Then, too, women and children are encumbrances to an army even in peaceful garrison life. An officer is ordered from one post to another. What does this involve? The transfer of gun and caisson, of sword and bayonet? No. The bulk of the impedimenta is women and children."

A number of officers' wives were accustomed to gather mornings on the porch of the quarters pertaining to one of them, when, seated in rocking chairs, they sewed, chatted and rocked. One morning the colonel, whose remarks upon matrimony in the army had been repeated by the husband of one of them to his wife the night before, passed this "rocking chair brigade," as he had dubbed [illegible] forage cap with a flourish and smiled benignly on them—for it is a matter of fact that a man who inveighs against the softer sex is especially deferential to them—and passed over the parade with a strut intended to show them that if he had the power he would banish every one of them.

Forthwith the rocking chair brigade resolved themselves into a council of war to consider the most advantageous method of making the colonel eat his words. But, first and foremost, every rocker was pledged not to reveal to her husband any plan that might be decided upon. And before going further I would say that the softer sex has been much maligned as to the keeping of a secret, for of the eight ladies who composed the brigade not one was found to betray the camp, though it must be admitted that each and every one confessed afterward to her husband that it almost killed her to keep "mum."

SHE SAT AND CHATTED WITH HIM.

The ladies having kept the secret, far be it from the narrator of this story to give it away. Suffice it to say that on the very morning that the colonel shrugged his shoulders at the rocking chair brigade and showed his back to them, never turning till he had disappeared within the portals of his office, a plan of attack was decided upon, to be executed by Mrs. Major MacCallum, the ranking lady of the post, the commandant being a bachelor.

However, before the campaign was inaugurated there was a long period of watchful waiting, during which the ladies of the post smiled on the colonel, the colonel became more and more careless in the expression of his army-matrimonial opinions and the leaks through the married officers widened. As the ocean wave tosses its head most defiantly before breaking, so did the colonel, ignorant of the impression he was creating, air his opinions that the noblest work of God is a soldier—except one encumbered with a family, when it is his bounden duty to resign and give way in the line of promotion.

One morning the colonel while crossing the parade to his office saw the post carryall drawn by a pair of mules go by. At the window appeared the face of a girl about eighteen years of age. Whether this lady was fair or not makes no difference in this story. She was young. Every other woman at the post had reached middle age, and all had borne their husbands more children than the army regulations provide. Some of them had lost whatever beauty they may have once possessed.

But the face at the coach window. The colonel had seen nothing like it since he had been promoted and ordered to this frontier post. Its owner had evidently just arrived, for on the rack in the rear was a trunk big enough, the colonel thought, to fill an army wagon without any other baggage. The commandant went on to his office, sat down at his desk and went to work looking over a bundle of requisitions left by the quartermaster for his approval. But somehow that mild face at the coach window, wearing the pleased look of one visiting new and attractive scenes, got between the man and the requisitions. He turned down one for repairs on the guardhouse, which were badly needed, and approved one for laundry implements without noticing that had it not been for an overplus of married soldiers at the post the present supply would have been ample.

Be it remembered that Colonel Garrison was forty-two years old, a period when a man feels that he has [illegible] attraction for young girls [illegible] more than a year, except those attached to the post he commanded, none of whom was either young or beautiful. When, therefore, the next day he passed Mrs. MacCallum sitting on her porch in front of her quarters with the girl he had seen at the coach window he stopped to pass a few compliments. Mrs. MacCallum introduced Miss Madeline Badger, her niece, who had come to make her a brief visit.

"I fear, colonel," said the lady, "that you are such a devotee to bachelor habits that we shall see nothing of you while my niece is here; otherwise I should hope to have you aid in entertaining her."

"I assure you, madam, with several youngsters having nothing to do but an occasional tour of duty the young lady will not need the attention of an old fellow like me."

Miss Madeline Badger made no reply to this whatever in words, but sat looking at the colonel with admiring eyes. One would have thought she was looking at an Apollo. There is something very attractive to a middle aged man in an admiring gaze from a young girl who has not yet learned to keep her admiration to herself. The colonel was much affected, and as he walked away, feeling that those mild eyes were following, he felt more proud of himself than ever before in his life. But, probably, he thought, when the youngsters appeared they would be turned in another direction.

Mrs. MacCallum decided to give a dance for her niece, and great preparations were making therefor.

"Colonel Garrison," she said, "I am in trouble about the matter of opening the ball. I assigned Mr. Twining to open it with the guest of honor, my niece, and she has refused him for a first partner."

"What's the matter with Twining?" asked the colonel.

"Nothing. Madeline has no objection to him whatever. But she considers that since the ball is given for her it is her right to open it with the [illegible]."

"What? Does she wish to open it with me?"

"She declares that she will open it with no one else."

"My dear madam, please tell your niece that I shall be charmed to open the ball with her."

The colonel dancing with Miss Madeline Badger was surely an interesting sight. To be preferred to young men who had been recent girl killers at West Point was a triumph that he had supposed impossible for a man of his age. Jupiter leading Terpsichore in the dance could not have appeared more godly. Nor was the first dance all. When it was over Miss Badger led the commandant to a window seat, where she sat and chatted with him, and since none of his inferior officers would venture to take her away from him and she made no excuse to leave him he was forced whether or not to stay where he was till the man who had been assigned to her for the next dance approached.

Mrs. MacCallum had seen to it that the colonel was down on Miss Badger's card for a number of dances, and when the function was over he went to his quarters, his head whirling as his heels had whirled during the evening. The major's wife had gained a victory in the very beginning of the campagin.

Miss Badger instead of making a short visit made a long one. But she made short work of the colonel. Those who were in the secret that she was being used to put him hors de combat in his fight against women in the army did not dream but that she would throw him over in the end for one of the younger officers, any one of whom would have been glad to get her. Those unadvised wondered what it all meant.

Every one knows that in the choice of a mate a man is subject to influence, and what he will do may be foretold from those influences. As for a woman, in the matter of her choice she resembles a crab. No one can tell whether she will go forward or backward or sidewise. Miss Badger in the end astonished those who had put her forward to sting the colonel by suddenly announcing her engagement to him.

The conspirators builded better than they knew.

Colonel Garrison in speaking of women in the army has all the enthusiasm of a new convert.

"Why, my dear fellow," he will say to a brother officer, "what would become of the discipline necessary to the army were it not for the softening influence of women? There would be perpetual mutiny."

Not Complimentary.

Mrs. Black—I don't want to make a scene, but that man over there is staring at me very offensively. Mr. Black—He is, eh? I'll speak to him. Mrs. Black (a few moments later)—Did he apologize? Mr. Black—Y-e-s; he said he was looking for his aunt and thought at first that you were she!

They Avoid Odd Numbers.

The Siamese have a superstitious dislike of odd numbers, and they studiously strive to have in their houses an even number of windows, doors, rooms and cupboards.

THE "WHY" OF A "HOT BOX."

A Railroad Official Says the Cause Is Simply Carelessness.

In answer to the question "What is a hot box?" a Kansas City Southern official has the following to say:

"A hot box is a sign that the safety first rule is not practiced by some car department man.

"There is no excuse for a hot box after a car is sent out if the train is carefully looked over by the car men at each terminal. Primarily a hot box is caused by poor waste and an insufficient 'greasing' at the time it should have been done, and there is no excuse for one. A hot box is liable to cause a wreck, and a wreck on most railroads costs money, much more than the price of a sufficient quantity of waste and oil and grease to protect the journals of the car wheels.

"The farmer who buys a new wagon or a buggy has a pretty good idea of what a hot box means and the ways to prevent it. When he buys a new wagon he sees to it that the spindle is well greased so it will not get hot. He watches it closely and does not take any chances on the wheels running hot. The farmer's wheels on his new wagon or buggy would stick, and if he persisted in driving ahead he would soon have a bad spindle and a bad wheel.

"However, the results would not be so disastrous as they would be in a train of cars running at a speed of fifteen or twenty miles an hour. It's no wonder that trainmen use language unfit for a Sunday school class when they find a hot box in their train. They know that some one has been careless and shirking in his work and that he is to blame."—New York Post.

BRITAIN'S REPLY IS MADE PUBLIC

Tone Is Even More Friendly In Spirit Than American Note.

REFUTES MANY CONTENTIONS

British Reply Regarding Foodstuffs Weakest Point in Earl Grey's Note—Declares Foe Violates Rule of Humanity—Figures Prove Abuses by Neutral Powers.

Washington, Jan. 11.—The reply of Great Britain to the protest of the United States against British practices in interfering with the neutral trade of this country was made public at the state department here in the afternoon. The text of the note was simultaneously given to the press in London in accordance with an arrangement with London.

In tone the British reply is even more friendly and in spirit quite as frank as the American note. It is in most respects a convincing argument in support of the British exercise of its control of the seas and seeks with considerable success to refute some of the contentions set forth in the American protest.

Violating Rule of Humanity.

Aside from the protest against the methods rather than the principle of British policy with regard to stopping contraband destined for an enemy country, it was considered here that the strongest point in the American note [illegible] Great Britain had violated her own and accepted rule in her treatment of foodstuff as absolute contraband when consigned to neutral countries adjoining Germany. The British reply to this contention is probably the weakest point in the argument of his majesty's government. While it is maintained that Great Britain has adhered to the accepted rule and while it is declared that it is her present intention to do so, an excuse for departure from the rule in future is sought in the allegation that her enemies are violating the accepted rules of civilization and humanity.

Reply Generally Anticipated.

In general the British reply presents little that was not anticipated here by those familiar with the respective views of the two parties to the controversy. As was expected Great Britain gives every assurance that could be desired of conducting her operations with the least possible harm to the interests of the United States and those of neutral trade in general and borrowing the very language of the American note with regard to trade interference asserts that only such interference as "is necessary to protect the belligerents' national safety and then only to the extent to which this is necessary," is warranted or intended by Great Britain. It is explained that this note is a preliminary communication to "remove some misconceptions that seem to exist" and will be followed by one dealing in more detail with the issues raised.

One Contention Disproved.

Taking up the American contention that British practices have caused depression in American trade by denying American products their long established markets in neutral countries of Europe, the British cite the American export figures for November, 1913 and 1914. Great Britain concedes that cotton may have fallen off, but points out that she can not be blamed for that as she has at all times declared and practiced the intention of not interfering with cotton as contraband.

Figures of Neutrals Support Plaint.

Replying to American contentions regarding copper Great Britain shows from American figures how tremendously the imports of copper by the neutral countries contiguous to Germany and Austria have increased since the war. "With such figures," the note declares, "the presumption is very strong that the bulk of copper consigned by these countries has recently been intended not for their own use but for that of a belligerents who cannot import it direct." It is declared that four cargoes of copper and aluminum nominally consigned to Sweden are known by the British authorities to have been definitely consigned to Germany and hence are being detained for prize court proceedings.

"I cannot believe," says Sir Edward Grey, "that with such figures before them and in such cases as just mentioned the government of the United States would question the propriety of his majesty's government in taking suspected cargoes to a prize court."

Hints at Private Business Pressure.

This statement by the British foreign minister is regarded here as a reference to the fact that the pressure of private business interests here upon the state department is understood to have been partly responsible for the American note. The British claim to know that the administration has been approached through every possible channel in the interest of certain business affected by British policy.

It is clearly stated in the note that Great Britain believes the United States must bear some of the responsibility for delays for neutral shipping because of its action in prohibiting the publication of ships manifests until thirty days after they have left port, which the note declares caused more examination and detentions than would have been otherwise necessary.

Italy Stops Military Shows.

Rome, Jan. 11.—The Italian government has prohibited the production of moving picture films representing military scenes and also has forbidden music hall artists wearing uniforms, the object being not to provoke popular enthusiasm.

PHILIP KEHOE

Passed Away at His Home Northeast of Tecumseh, Friday Evening, Aged 81 Years.

Philip Kehoe, a well known and highly respected resident of Tecumseh township, died Friday night after a lingering illness.

He was born in Ireland 81 years ago and came to Tecumseh in 1856 when he purchased the farm where he lived until his death. By his great ambition and sterling qualities he owned one of the finest farm homes in Lenawee county. Although confined to his wheel chair for two years, his strong character and genial disposition made him a very patient sufferer.

He is survived by seven daughters and two sons: Mary and Martha, now nuns of the Immaculate Heart of Mary convent, Monroe; Agnes, Margaret, Irene, Andrew and Louis of Tecumseh; Mrs. Frances Keusch, a lawyer of Detroit; and Katherine wife of Jas F. Rose, Battle Creek. Two daughters are deceased: Elizabeth, wife of D. D. Eldredge of Adrian and Helen of Tecumseh.

The funeral was held at St. Dominic's church, Clinton, Monday at 10 a. m., when Solemn High Mass was read by Fr. O'Donnell assisted by Frs Fisher and Sampons.

The family of Philip Kehoe wish to express their gratitude to the many friends and kind neighbors who generously assisted them in their bereavement, particularly the Grange, Altar Society of St. Elizabeth's church and the Tecumseh State Savings Bank of which he was a stockholder.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCE

Rev. D. H. Glass of Detroit, a Sunday School specialist will conduct a Sunday School conference at the M. E church on Wednesday Jan. 13th. There will be morning, afternoon and evening sessions. Friends of the Sunday School are requested to bring pot luck dinner and supper so that friends from away may be accomodated. This is a good chance to get help on Sunday School problems. A cordial welcome is extended to all.

Cooling by Flame.

It is hard to appreciate that fire has widely different degrees of heat, for every burning blaze seems to have the extreme heat of fire, yet the flame of burning alcohol is actually used for cooling purposes in one make of searchlight because the alcohol flame is not nearly so hot as the point of fire at the center of the searchlight.

A good searchlight needs to have its lamp as small as possible, and the nearer it is to just a point of light, though still having intense light, the farther can its beams be thrown. The only way to concentrate the light is to raise the degree of heat of the light source, such as an electric arc, but intense heat is likely to result in melting the whole apparatus.

The above searchlight succeeds in highly concentrating the light source, and then to prevent this concentrated light from melting everything near it alcohol vapor is fed round it. The alcohol vapor burns of course, but as it naturally burns at a temperature far lower than that of the electric arc it acts something like the water jacket of an automobile engine and prevents the metal and glass of the searchlight from becoming excessively hot.—Saturday Evening Post.

Wellington's Reports Voluminous.

In the campaigns of the past our generals had much more time to write dispatches than now. Wellington, for instance, was able to write a detailed account of the battle of Waterloo on the night following its occurrence. And to read the whole of his dispatches in his various campaigns you would have to wade through twenty bulky, closely printed volumes.—London Chronicle.

The Worm Turned.

Coal Merchant—I say, Premium, I want to insure my coal yard against fire. What's the cost of a policy for $10,000? Insurance Agent—What coal is it? Same kind you sent me last? Merchant—Yes, it is. Agent—Oh, I wouldn't insure it if I were you. It won't burn.—London Express.

WIT AND WISDOM

The Wit and Wisdom Club was most delightfully entertained last evening at the pleasant home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Rosacrans. There was a large attendance.

After the opening of the meeting Dr. North, president, took charge and the following program was given:

A very interesting paper on Luther Burbank was given by Mrs. F. S. Turner.

Solo—Elmer Slayton who also responded to an encore.

Mrs. Charles Slayton then gave a paper on "The Latest Achievements in Horticulture."

Roll call with responses on something interesting in horticulture.

Mesdames F. B. Wood and Ella Hodges gave a piano duet.

By special request Mrs. Moore repeated "Little Boy" for the benefit of those who came in late.

Refreshments were served and a social time closed the evening's entertainment.

The next meeting will be held January 25 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Waring.

PUBLIC INSTALLATION

The regular meeting of Beers Camp No. 179 S. O. V. will be held Thursday evening Jan. 25 at 7 o'clock. All members are urged to be present. Following the business meeting the installation of the officers of the Camp will take place at 7:45 Comrade J. D. Shull will act as installating officer. Comrades of Beers Post and their wives, the ladies of Auxiliary, Camp members and their families are cordially invited. A musical and literary program will be given.

WAR PICTURES.

There was a good attendance last evening at the opera house for the motion picture show of the war in Europe. The various scenes were most interesting and pathetic—the women and children fleeing from their native towns, not knowing where they would find shelter or food, others crossing the line into Holland which so far is neutral ground, each one bearing some of their earthly treasures; families separated, not knowing if ever they would be reunited; the battle fields after the battle is over; the suffering, dying soldiers; the Red Cross nurses and Sisters, rendering what aid they could—all these sorrowful experiences showed clearly the horrors of war.

The lecturer gave a very interesting talk on these pictures as they passed and brought a clearer understanding of the situation to all.

ANNUAL MEETING

The Annual meeting of the First Baptist church was held Friday Jan 8. A pot luck dinner was enjoyed, after which the business of the church was transacted.

Dr. L. G. North, Church Treas., read his report, which had been prepared with his usual skill. The following trustees were elected to serve three years: F. D. Avery, H. C. Lamkin, Mrs. Grace Moore was elected Chorister.

The total expenditures of the Church amounted $1306.95, total for benevolences amouted to $92 89: Total expenditures of Sunday School amounted to $94.24. Treas., of sick and needy fund had expended $9.50

The B. Y. P. U. had expended $100 45, Ladies Aid Society $503.05 $100 was given to Current expenses. Grand Total including benevolences $1931.18.

The Sunday School has an attendance of 227. Young peoples Society 81. George Kay was elected head usher with power to appoint his assistants.

Jas Morse elected Supt. of Sunday School. R. S. Moore first assistant, and A. O. Howard second assistant, Leon VanValkenburg Treas., Russell McNeil Sec., and Florence Waldron, Librarian.

The church is to make an every member canvas for current expenses and benevolences. A good spirit prevails as was evidenced by the fact that the attendance at the Annual Meeting was the largest of the present pastorate.

FARMERS CLUB

The Farmer's Club held their meeting last Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Kennedy on East Chicago St. with a large attendance. A short program was given as follows: Recitation, Mary Ellen Newsome Reading, Mrs. Will Raymond. Memory Quiz, Mrs. J. E. Eaton after which the question of Co-operative work was discussed. Refreshments of doughnuts and coffee were served. A very delightful social evening was enjoyed by all.

Cherry Wood.

Cherry is the wood most used as a backing for the metal plates from which illustrations are printed in magazines and periodicals. It is chosen above all others because it holds its shape, does not warp or twist, works smoothly and does not split.

Beautiful Kashmir.

It has been said that India is the brightest jewel in the British crown. But one cannot realize the brightness of the gem to the full until one has so journed for a space in that veritable dreamland situated in the wedge of mountains forming the north center boundary of that peninsula. No other country in the world can boast of such a diversity of scenery or is so full of beauty spots as the valleys and uplands of Kashmir. Snow covered mountains, pine clad hills, rushing torrents, clear streams, limpid lakes and broad alluvial plains all combine to make up this wonderland, which forms the summer haunt of many jaded plainsmen from the sultry cantonments of India. Of late, alas, the ubiquitous globe trotter has discovered it, and his excessive supply of cash brings higher prices, silk socks and white waistcoats into a paradise where "boiled shirts" and other appurtenances of an evil civilization should never have been allowed to penetrate.—Wide World Magazine.

Yes, He Was In.

The collector was after a deadbeat, and there were rumors that he was in more serious trouble even than owing debts. The collector was told to get after him at once and run him down before anybody else got hold of him. So he chose a time of day when the deadbeat would be most likely to be at home and went to his house and rang the bell. The man's wife came to the door. "Your husband is in?" he said sternly—he made a statement rather than a question of it. She looked scared and answered, "Y—yes, sir." "I want to see him at once," he went on, very severely. "Why, you can't see him," she answered. "He's in, and yet I can't see him? I'd like to know why I can't!" "Because he's in for six months!" she sobbed, and shut the door in his face.—Argonaut.

Lyddite.

Lyddite, the powder that has enormous explosive force and can be fired from a gun easily carried about, does not, as has been widely supposed, take its name from a man, but from an ancient town near the coast of Kent, England, the town of Lydd, where there is a government artillery range, where the tests were made that resulted in the preparation of this explosive. Lyddite has extraordinary qualities aside from its explosive force, since its fumes are so suffocating as sometimes to be intolerable. Lydd shares the notoriety that attaches to the name of Dumdum, that other peaceful city in Bengal, where are manufactured the expanding bullets that [illegible] unfavorable comment [illegible]

STOP BUYING EXPENSIVE COUGH REMEDIES

Make the Best at Home.

Money spent for the old style, ready made, cough syrups in bottles holding only 2 to 2½ ounces is very largely wasted, because most of them are composed principally of sugar and water. Yet you have to pay the same price as if it was all medicine. Stop wasting this money. You can make a better cough medicine at home at one-fifth the cost. Merely go to B J. Pulver's Drug Store and ask for two ounces (50c worth) of Schiffman's Concentrated Expectorant. Mix this with one pint of granulated sugar and one-half pint of boiling water which makes a full pint (16 ounces). This new, simple, pleasant remedy is guaranteed to relieve the worst cough or cold. Also excellent for Bronchial Asthma, Bronchitis, croup, hoarseness and whooping cough. One bottle will make enough home-made cough medicine to probably last the whole family the entire winter. Children like it. It is so pleasant to take and it positively contains no chloroform, opium, morphine or other narcotics as do most cough mixtures. Keep it on hand in case of emergency and stop each cough before it gets a firm hold. The above druggist has been authorized to return the money in every single case where it does not give perfect satisfaction or is not found the best remedy ever used. Absolutely no risk is run in buying this remedy under this positive guarantee. adv

Word has just been received of the death of John McKendry in Macon, who has been in poor health for some time with brights disease. Mrs McKendry is seriously ill with pneumonia.

Special communication of Tecumseh Lodge No 69 F. & A. M. on Friday evening, January 15. Past Master J. R. Nyland will confer the E. A. degree after which Brother Wm. A. Rex will deliver an address.

Mrs. Doane Fosdick and daughter of Battle Creek came Friday for a short visit with her mother and husband Mr and Mrs. Samuel Shutt. Mrs. Fosdick returned home Monday but the little girl remained for a longer visit.

Mr. and Mrs Bion Hodges were very pleasantly surprised Friday evening when a number of their friends dropped upon them. They came with well filled baskets for a picnic supper. Cards furnished the amusement of the evening.

Among those from out of town in attendance at the play "Excuse Me', were Mr. and Mrs. O. B. Lenardson Misses Cora Johnson and Veva McCarbery, John Preston, Samuel Gibson and Lyman Curtis of Britton, Mr. and Mrs. Oral Freer of Ridgeway, John and Joe Metzer, Catherine Crosby, Glen Wilson, Otto Sipe and Leon Richardson of Clinton and Russell and Emma Josephs of Tipton.

St. Peters church was filled to its capacity at the 4 o'clock service when Bishop Williams confirmed a class of fifteen. The church was handsomely decorated and special music was given by the vested choir. The Bishop's theme was "Ones duty to himself his neighbor and his God" and his charge to the class was given in his usual impressive manner. At the close of the meeting the congregation were invited to pass out by way of the Parish House, and meet the Bishop.

BUSINESS CHANGE

For some time past we have known that the firm of C. A. Slayton & Son were arranging to dispose of their business to a co-operative association which was being organized in this community and styled "The Tecumseh Co-Operative Association." This locality is being canvassed and already our people have subscribed for over half of the needed capital, $25,000.00. An organization has been effected, directors chosen and officers elected to hold office until the annual meeting to be held about February 1st.

C. A. Slayton, the head of the business, came to Tecumseh with his parents in 1861. In 1862 Mr. Slayton's father, J. P. Slayton, connected himself with Enoch Tindall then in the agricultural implement and general produce business under the firm name of Slayton & Tindall.

While a boy attending school C. A. Slayton put in his spare time clerking in his father's store and later was taken into the business, the firm name being changed to Slayton Tindall Co. A few years after Tindall retired from the business and the firm was changed to Slayton & Son, the name it still bears. Elmer, like his father, grew up in the business and was taken into the partnership without the title being changed.

C. A. Slayton has been connected with this business for fifty years and is without doubt the oldest business man in Tecumseh if not in this section of the country from point of service in one continuous line. Mr. Slayton, by close application to business, has built up a large trade in this community, enjoys the confidence of the people and will be greatly missed in the ranks of active business.

Mr. Slayton has given much of his time to the Michigan Retail Implement and Vehicle Dealers' Association and has the honor at this time of holding the office of vice president in this organization. He is a stockholder and director in the Tecumseh State Savings Bank and was its first president. He has served this village as town clerk and filled an unexpired term as justice of the peace, having the distinction of performing one marriage ceremony. He does not say what effect this had upon the contracting parties.

The Herald regrets very much the passing from our midst of this old firm but our hearty best wishes go with the Slaytons in whatever new field they may enter.

The Tecumseh Co-operative Association Organized.

The co-operative movement is fast coming to the front. The whole American people are awakening to the fact that the present competitive system is expensive and burdensome. As the people become educated and get their eyes open to the expensiveness of competition, they turn to the co-operative movement for relief. The best posted people admit the soundness of the true co-operative principle.

The Tecumseh Co-operative Association is organized on the plans of the American Co-operative Organization Bureau of Chicago. The association is formed with an authorized capital stock of $25,000 divided into 250 shares of $100 each, half of which have already been taken by over 100 of the leading farmers of the vicinity. The business is to be owned exclusively by local capital and conducted by local talent. Has no connections other than advisory with any other co-operative association. It is so organized that a member has only one vote regardless of the number of shares he may hold. This keeps the association from getting into the hands of a ring to be manipulated for the benefit of a few. The business of Slayton & Son is to be taken over by the new association.

"EXCUSE ME"

The Overland limited express bound for Reno arrived on schedule time and the pulman cars were soon filled with passengers and started on a mile a minute trip. The principal characters are the newlyweds and the various episodes along the way furnish the fun from start to finish. The setting for the play was quite unique, and the train crew were right at their post everytime. The cast of characters was unusually good. Each one entering into the spirit of the occasion. It is to be regretted that there was not a better house to greet them. Those present certainly enjoyed a laugh a minute as promised.

ANTIQUITY OF MANKIND.

Geikie Places It at Between 250,000 and 500,000 Years.

In his work, "The Antiquity of Man in Europe," Professor James Geikie of Edinburgh university declares his belief that man has inhabited Europe between 250,000 and 500,000 years.

All such estimates are based on geological facts, such as the rate at which sediment is deposited or at which stalagmites grow, that are very hard to determine with any accuracy, but no one now doubts that man is far older than men of science originally supposed him to be.

"When we reflect," says Professor Geikie, "on the many geographical changes that man has witnessed—the submergence and re-elevation of enormous tracts, the erosion of valleys and general lowering of the surface by denudation, when we consider that he has lived through a succession of stupendous climatic revolutions; that he has seen widely contrasted floras and faunas alternately occupying our continent—tundras, steppes and great forests succeeding each other again and again—we must feel convinced that the few thousand years that have elapsed since the downfall of Babylonian, Assyrian and Egyptian empires are as nothing compared with the long aeons that separate the earliest times of history from the apparition of palaeolithic man in Europe."

RIFLE SIGHTS.

The Drop of the Bullet In Its Flight Makes Them Necessary.

The average person if asked to explain why a rifle is sighted would probably be unable to do so beyond some vague remark about taking correct aim.

Sights are necessary because a bullet does not travel in a straight line, but, under the influence of gravity and friction, begins to drop almost as soon as it leaves the muzzle. Thus the bullet of the British service rifle drops six inches in the first 100 yards, but when it has gone 200 yards it will have dropped not twelve inches, but two feet. The drop increases by leaps and bounds with the distance. Were there no sights on the rifle and you wanted to hit a mark at 200 yards you would clearly have to aim two feet above it.

This would be awkward, for you would lose sight of the mark aimed at, to say nothing of the difficulty of correctly estimating a distance of two feet at 200 yards.

The sights of a rifle enable you to keep your eye on the mark, although the muzzle of the rifle is actually pointing above it. The movable slide of the backsight enables you automatically to point the muzzle just so many feet above the mark aimed at as is necessary to counteract the known drop of the bullet at various ranges.—London Answers.

COMFORTING WORDS

Many a Tecumseh Household Will Find Them So.

To have the pains and aches of a bad back removed—to be entirely free from annoying, dangerous urinary disorders, is enough to make any kidney sufferer grateful. The following advice of one who has suffered will prove comforting words to hundreds of Tecumseh readers

A. C. Aylesworth, W. Chicago St., Tecumseh says: About four years ago I had an at[illegible] of lumbago and my kidneys were disordered. I at length heard of Doan's Kidney Pill's and procuring a supply at C. A. Wright & Son's Drug-store, I began using them. In a short time I was relieved. I have had no return attack of the trouble. I hope other kidney sufferers will read my statement and be led to give Doan's Kidney Pills a trial."

DEADLY SHRAPNEL.

Good "Man Killers," but Their Effectiveness Is Limited.

Shrapnel, so called after their inventor, the British General Shrapnel, are thin cases of tough steel containing a large number of bullets—in the British artillery 263 and in the French and German 300—with a small bursting charge at the base of the projectile. The bursting charge breaks the thin steel case, when the bullets sweep forward with the velocity imparted to the projectile by the gun. Shrapnel are regarded as good "man killers," but they are quite ineffective against buildings, where shells are deadly. For the attack of field guns and buildings and for action against troops in trenches most armies employ howitzers, which are short, squat guns that toss their projectiles high in the air, high angle fire.

In the British army every division has fifty-four field guns and eighteen howitzers. These howitzers are of 4.5 inch caliber, firing a shell 4.5 inch in diameter and weighing thirty-five pounds. They have a range of 7,200 yards, which is 1,000 yards greater than the range of the British field gun.

The defect of the howitzer is that its shell is very heavy, and consequently much fewer rounds can be carried than with the field gun. There is no security that a single howitzer shell will do twice the damage of an ordinary field gun shell, though it weighs twice as much.

The French do not employ a howitzer in their field artillery. The Germans use a heavy pattern of six inch caliber, firing a shell of about ninety pounds, and a lighter pattern of 4.2 inch caliber.—New York Sun.

THE RED CROSS.

The Red Cross owes its real origin to the great and terrible campaign of 1859, when Napoleon made it his boast that he would free Italy "from the Alps to the Adriatic." At the great battle of Magenta 10,000 Austrians and some 5,000 French soldiers were left dead and dying on the fields.

A Swiss gentleman, named M. Henri Dunant, made a pilgrimage to that battlefield and was an involuntary eyewitness of the awful carnage of the battle of Solferino, a battle which lasted some sixteen hours and left some 30,000 dead and wounded. Henri Dunant realized that the medical service of what was probably the greatest army in the world was absolutely inadequate to cope with the casualties, and he was at once compelled to take some action to rectify the matter.

The result was that he wrote a small book for private circulation, entitled "Un Souvenir de Solferino," and this, with his private appeal, resulted in Napoleon III. commanding Dunant to his presence, where, with the great Marshal MacMahon, they seriously talked matters over.

The result of this was a conference of the powers, called together by the Swiss federal government, at which Henri Dunant placed his proposals. Out of this Geneva conference of 1864 resulted the Geneva convention, under which all medical supplies and personnel in war time are protected.

A Prehistoric Lake.

One of the most interesting remnants of a prehistoric lake in the United States is that now known as Estancia valley, which lies south of Santa Fe and east of Albuquerque, N. M. From examination of the deposits in this section geologists are of the opinion that this lake existed at the same time as Lake Bonneville, in Utah, and other ancient lakes of the arid west during the cold, humid glacial period. The theory of the existence of an ancient lake in the valley is based on the presence of shore features and lake sediments. Sea cliffs, terraces, beaches, beach ridges, spits and bars are found on all sides of the lake flat at altitudes between 6,100 and 6,200 feet above sea level.—Argonaut.

Modern Uhlans.

The uhlans are a distinctive corps. The name is by no means distinctly German. A body of uhlans was formed for the French army by Marshal Saxe. They were introduced into the Prussian service in 1740, and forty years later the Austrians also had a corps of uhlans—light cavalry armed with lance. The modern uhlan may be classed with the heavy cavalry.—London Opinion.

MENDEL'S LAW.

Shown In the Crossing of Pure Yellow and Pure Green Peas.

The following beautifully clear summary of the principles of mendelism is due to the Rev. W. Wilks, the famous horticulturist, who developed the Shirley poppy:

If you cross pure yellow and pure green peas either way—it matters not which is seed bearer and which pollen bearer—you will get all yellow seeds. If you sow these hybrid seeds, each will, if it germinates, produce a plant which will bear, say, forty seeds, thirty of which will on the average be yellow and ten green. The green, if sown and sown and sown for countless generations, will always bear green seeds true to the original green parents (barring the always possible intervention of insects).

Not so the thirty yellow. These when sown will on the average produce ten plants bearing all pure yellow seeds, which will be constant and true to the original yellow parent for countless generations. The remaining twenty plants will be impure yellow, each plant producing, on the average, one-quarter of its seeds pure yellow, one-quarter pure green and one-half impure yellow, which last will repeat the process and proportion practically forever.

This is the law of inheritance which is the basis of all the studies of the eugenists and, in fact, of all breeders of animals and plants.—New York World.

Cause of One War.

William the Conqueror lost his life in France through his horse treading on a redhot cinder while he was superintending the burning of Mantes, but few people know the fact which gave rise to the campaign that cost William his life.

During the latter part of his reign he became abnormally stout and consequently the laughingstock of not only his subjects, but his neighbors across the water. One day his contemporary, Philip of France, compared him to a fillet of veal on casters and suggested that he should be exhibited at a prize monarch show. This so enraged William that he straightway made war upon his ridiculer, and the loss of thousands of lives was the result.—London Tit-Bits.

The First Evolutionist.

The first to suggest the transmutation of species among animals was Buffon, about 1750. The eccentric Lord Monboddo was the first to suggest the possible descent of man from the ape, about 1774. In 1813 a Dr. W. C. Wells first proposed to apply the principle of natural selection to the natural history of man, and in 1822 Herbert first asserted the transmutation of species in plants.

The Way to Boston.

Earlier in the day he had been sixteen miles from Boston. He was now only eleven miles away. The condition of his pockets was such that there was no way for him to reach the city without further wear on his shoes. Several automobiles had rushed past him toward the city, but although he had looked at them appealingly, the drivers had made no sign that they were willing to help the footsore pedestrian.

He grew a little bitter as he put one foot up and the other foot down on the dusty road. Finally he was hailed by the driver of a car that bore a Pennsylvania license number.

"Hey, there, do you know the way to Boston?"

"Yes, I do. Just follow me. I am going there."

Round Shouldered Boys.

Head up, chin in, chest out and shoulders back is a good slogan for a boy scout who desires an erect figure. One can scarcely think of a round shouldered scout. Yet there are such among the boys who desire to be scouts.

There is no particular exercise that a boy can take to cure round shoulders. The thing to remember is that all exercise that is taken should be done in the erect position, then the muscles will hold the body there.

An erect body means a deeper chest room for the important organs to work and thus affords them the best chance to act.

A broad campaign of publicity on the subject of rural life is needed in this state today to bring the problems of the farmers to the forefront. The city problems are blazoned upon the front pages of the metropolitan dailies and echoed in the country press, but the troubles of the farmers are seldom told, except by those who seek to profit by the story, and the glitter of the package ofttimes obscures the substance. A searching investigation into the needs of the farmers will reveal many inherent defects in our economic system that can be easily remedied when properly understood and illuminated by the power of the press.

The rural press, the pulpit and the school are a trinity of powerful influences that the farmer must utilize to their fullest capacity before he can occupy a commanding position in public affairs. These gigantic agencies are organized in every rural community and only await the patronage and co-operation of the farmers to fully develop their energy and usefulness. They are local forces working for the best interests of their respective communities. Their work is to build and their object is to serve. They prosper only through the development and prosperity of the community.

Every farmer in this state should subscribe for the local paper as well as farm periodicals [illegible] publications as he may find profitable, but he should by all means subscribe for his local paper, and no home should be without it. The local paper is part of the community life and the editor understands the farmer's problems. It is the local press that will study the local problems and through its columns deal with subjects of most vital importance to local life of the community.

A Noble Task.

In too many instances the country papers mimic the city press by giving prominence to scandals, accidents and political agitation. The new rural civilization has placed upon the rural press renewed responsibilities, and enlarged possibilities for usefulness. It cannot perform its mission to agriculture by recording the frailties, the mishaps and inordinate ambitions of humanity, or by filling its columns with the echoes of the struggles of busy streets, or by enchanting stories of city life which lure our children from the farm.

It has a higher and nobler task. Too often the pages of the city dailies bristle with the struggle of ambitious men in their wild lust for power, and many times the flames of personal conflict sear the tender buds of new civilization and illuminate the pathway to destruction. The rural press is the governing power of public sentiment and must hold steadfast to principle and keep the ship of state in the roadstead of progress. The rural press can best serve the interests of the farmers by applying its energies to the solution of problems affecting the local community. It must stem the mighty life current that is moving from the farm to the cities, sweeping before it a thousand boys and girls per day. It has to deal with the fundamental problems of civilization at their fountain head. Its mission is to direct growth, teach efficiency and mold the intellectual life of the country, placing before the public the daily problems of the farmers and giving first attention to the legislative, co-operative, educational and social needs of the agricultural classes within its respective community.

The Power of Advertising.

The influence of advertising is clearly visible in the homes and habits of the farmers, and the advertising columns of the press are making their imprint upon the lives of our people. The farmer possesses the things that are best advertised.

The farmer is entitled to all the advantages and deserves all the luxuries of life. We need more art, science and useful facilities on the farms, and many homes and farms are well balanced in this respect, but the advertiser can render a service by teaching the advantages of modern equipment throughout the columns of the rural press.

The farmers are in need of personal leadership. They have political leaders, but they need local industrial community and educational leaders.

Lazy farmers are just as useless as dead ones and take up more room.

When the soul communes with the spirit of nature the back to the farm movement prevails.

There are two kinds of farmers. One tries to take all the advice he hears and the other won't take any at all.

THE COUNTY FAIR

By Peter Radford
Lecturer National Farmers' Union

The farmer gets more out of the fair than anyone else. The fair to a city man is an entertainment; to a farmer it is education. Let us take a stroll through the fair grounds and linger a moment at a few of the points of greatest interest. We will first visit the mechanical department and hold communion with the world's greatest thinkers.

You are now attending a congress of the mental giants in mechanical science of all ages. They are addressing you in tongues of iron and steel and in language mute and powerful tell an eloquent story of the world's progress. The inventive geniuses are the most valuable farm hands we have and they perform an enduring service to mankind. We can all help others for a brief period while we live, but it takes a master mind to tower into the realm of science and light a torch of progress that will illuminate the pathway of civilization for future generations. The men who gave us the sickle, the binder, the cotton gin and hundreds of other valuable inventions work in every field on [illegible] continue their labors as long as time. Their bright intellects have conquered death and they will live and serve mankind on and on forever, without money and without price. They have shown us how grand and noble it is to work for others; they have also taught us lessons in economy and efficiency, how to make one hour do the work of two or more; have lengthened our lives, multiplied our opportunities and taken toll off the back of humanity.

They are the most practical men the world ever produced. Their inventions have stood the acid test of utility and efficiency. Like all useful men, they do not seek publicity, yet millions of machines sing their praises from every harvest field on earth and as many plows turn the soil in mute applause of their marvelous achievements.

FARMER RADFORD ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE

The home is the greatest contribution of women to the world, and the hearthstone is her throne. Our social structure is built around her, and social righteousness is in her charge. Her beautiful life lights the skies of hope and her refinement is the charm of twentieth century civilization. Her graces and her power are the cumulative products of generations of queenly conquest, and her crown of exalted womanhood is jeweled with the wisdom of saintly mothers. She has been a great factor in the glory of our country, and her noble achievements should not be marred or her hallowed influence blighted by the coarser duties of citizenship. American chivalry should never permit her to bear the burdens of defending and maintaining government, but should preserve her unsullied from the allied influences of politics, and protect her from the weighty responsibilities of the sordid affairs of life that will crush her ideals and lower her standards. The motherhood of the farm is our inspiration, she is the guardian of our domestic welfare and a guide to a higher life, but directing the affairs of government is not within woman's sphere, and political gossip would cause her to neglect the home, forget to mend our clothes and burn the biscuits.

RURAL SOCIAL CENTERS

We need social centers where our young people can be entertained, amused and instructed under the direction of cultured, clean and competent leadership, where aesthetic surroundings stir the love for the beautiful, where art charges the atmosphere with inspiration and power, and innocent amusements instruct and brighten their lives.

To hold our young people on the farm we must make farm life more attractive as well as the business of farming more remunerative. The school house should be the social unit, properly equipped for nourishing and building character, so that the lives of our people can properly function around it and become supplied with the necessary elements of human thought and activity.

Education is a developing of the mind, not a stuffing of the memory. Digest what you read.

Old men have visions, young men have dreams. Successful farmers plow deep while sluggards sleep.

The growing of legumes will retard soil depletion and greatly add to power to produce.

Great Endurance.

"An elephant is one of the strongest as well as one of the most patient animals on earth," said the student of natural history.

"He has to be," replied Mr. Growcher. "Think of all the circuses he is compelled to look at."—Washington Star.

Where Atlantic Is Narrowest.

Between Brazil and Guinea the Atlantic ocean is only about 1,800 miles wide. From Newfoundland to Ireland, the narrowest breadth north of the equator, is nearly twice as far. From New York to the nearest point of France is nearly three times as far.

Fashion.

"What makes the fashion?" a fashionable woman once asked the great designer Worth.

"What I make and you wear—that is the fashion, madam," he replied.

Evil grows and strengthens by endurance.—Cicero.

Belgium Helpless Anyway Till Spring, Says Commission

Need of Relief Still Very Urgent, According to Latest Reports From Stricken Land—How Americans Can Send Their Mite

By WILL IRWIN

BELGIAN REFUGEES IN THE RUINS OF TERMONDE.

According to the Commission For Relief In Belgium, the American people will probably have to feed the Belgian people all this winter. "We have taken pains to investigate," said one of the commissioners last week, "and the best informed Europeans tell us that there will be no change in the military situation this winter. It means that we must keep up the work until spring breaks or longer."

It has been a race with hunger, this business of feeding 8,500,000 people with supplies gathered a half a world away. All Belgium depends on American food. Half of Belgium is never more than a week ahead of starvation. Often it has come closer than that. Once the province of Limbourg, remote and hilly, was starving. In some communities the people had not eaten for two days, when one of our United States consuls managed to borrow from the Germans enough bread to keep the people alive until an American shipment arrived to repay the loan. Once Captain Lucey, the shipping agent in Holland, had to borrow 10,000 tons of wheat from the Dutch government. Liege and Hamme and historic Ghent were crying for bread, and it was still several days before the next American ship was due at Rotterdam. This was a noble thing for Holland to do since the Dutch themselves are short on food. Yes, it is a race with hunger, and America, now that she has faced the starter, must win! This is America's great and glorious part in the world war of 1914-15.

That every American may have a personal chance to help some Belgian the Commission For Relief In Belgium has arranged its "parcel post plan." Any one who wants to send a package containing between twenty and fifty pounds of nonperishable food need only put a tag on the package, address the tag to the nearest collection depot of the commission, stamp it in the regular way and drop it in the mail chute. If the giver puts on the package tag his name and address, TOGETHER WITH THE LETTER "B," the money he has spent for stamps will be refunded.

Packages mailed from MICHIGAN should be addressed to CENTRAL WAREHOUSE COMPANY, SAGINAW; GRAND RAPIDS ASSOCIATION OF COMMERCE, GRAND RAPIDS; who are collecting agents for this district.

NEW PRESIDENT AT MEXICO CITY

Rotation In Office Seems Active Principle of Republic.

GUTIERREZ IS OUT; GARZA, IN

Former Flees Capital Without Formality of Resigning—Doubt Exists as to Title of Position Assumed by New Ruler—Carranzistas Say Obregon Holds Capital.

Washington, Jan. 18.—The flight of Provisional President Gutierrez from Mexico City opens the way for the eighth president Mexico has had since 1911. The list is as follows:

Porfirio Diaz, abandoned presidency in May, 1911.

Francisco De La Barra, provisional president, May to December, 1911.

Francisco Madero, president, December, 1911, to February, 1913.

E. Carbajal, provisional president, July-August, 1914.

Eulalio Gutierrez, November, 1914, January, 1915.

S. Roque Gonzales Garza—Next.

Washington, Jan. 18.—Reports of the latest kaleidescopic change at Mexico City were received here by the state department, the British embassy and the Carranza agency.

According to these reports General Gutierrez abandoned the provisional presidency conferred upon him by the Villa-Zapata element and fled the capital without the formality of resigning his office. General Roque Gonzales Garza, recently chosen chairman of the convention, immediately took charge. There is some disagreement among the reports received here as to whether he assumed the title of provisional president of Mexico or whether he merely regards himself as the supreme authority for the Mexican federal district.

Outbreak of Looting Feared.

One report stated that for a time the Mexican capital was in a turmoil and that a general outbreak of looting was feared. General Garza took effective measures for policing the city, however, and the situation is said to be fairly quiet. The house of a British subject was entered, according to a report received at the British embassy, but this was the only case reported.

General Garza, in a statement, declared that Gutierrez, in advance of his departure, had ordered the evacuation of the city by practically the small force left there. This Garza declared would have left the city defenseless, and he immediately took charge in the interests of the preservation of the safety of the city itself. It is not clear from reports received here whether any of the troops obeyed Gutierrez's order to leave or not.

Garza Promises Good Order.

Garza announced that he would adopt all necessary measures for the preservation of peace within the city and that any persons fomenting disturbances would be summarily dealt with. According to his statement Gutierrez left for the north and was accompanied by three of his cabinet ministers, whose names are not yet known here.

Say Obregon Holds Capital.

The constitutionalist agency received a dispatch from the border asserting that Carranza troops under command of General Obregon had occupied Mexico City. While this is not regarded as an impossibility there is no confirmation of the report in official quarters. General Obregon was, when last reported, making his way toward Mexico City from Puebla and it is known that a small force of Zapatistas constituted the only defenses of the capital.

Gus Williams Kills Self.

Yonkers, N. Y., Jan. 18.—Gus Williams, whose real name was Leweck, known throughout the country a generation ago as an actor, shot himself in the head in a railroad station here and died in a hospital. Ill health and financial troubles are believed to have been the cause of his act.

New Indiana Postmasters.

LIVING VICTIMS DUG FROM RUINS

DEATH LIST REACHES 40,000

Government Making Liberal Appropriations for Sufferers—Work of Burying Dead Left in Abeyance While Work of Excavating for Living Is Pushed.

Rome, Jan. 18.—The government has appropriated the sum of $250,000 for the relief of the earthquake sufferers. This sum will be added to in any amount needed as Italy is prepared to handle the situation without aid from outside and to use the national resources to the fullest extent.

Pope Benedict paid another visit to the injured in the Hospice of Santa Maria and spent an hour consoling the victims. Many men and women of the nobility have volunteered as nurses in the various hospitals and the prefect of Rome has requisitioned beds in many hotels for the use of the [illegible]. Prince Colonna, mayor of Rome, has accepted the offer of the five-storied villa at Janiculum, containing eighty-five beds, which was used as a school by Martha Vichery and Alice Llewellyn.

The government observatory announces that since the morning of Jan. 13, 135 shocks have been registered on the seismographic instruments. All of these are what is known as after shocks, recurring at intervals after the main quake and generally of slight force.

Recovering Those Buried Alive.

The bodies taken from the ruins at [illegible] have not been buried as yet because the authorities do not wish to [illegible] the rescue work which [illegible] intensified since several [illegible] were saved. The voices of victims buried alive are still heard. A detachment of soldiers excavating in the girls' school saved two girls. There are many crushed bodies but also many of the scholars are yet alive in the debris and they are calling out in agony and begging the military to save them.

This incentive has driven the soldiers to the most frantic efforts and they are working feverishly, not stopping to eat or sleep, even until all the girls are saved. A young man who escaped from the wreck of his home saved his sisters unaided, but was unable to find his father. His fiance was buried alive in a nearby house and efforts to rescue her have proved fruitless, yet she unceasingly begs her lover to save her, crying to him that if he loves her he will find a way to get her out. The man is maddened with grief and his condition has made even the hardened soldiers weep. King Victor arrived and visited the hospital which has been improvised in the prison. He distributed relief to the soldiers personally, supervised the rescue work and ordered an increase in the supply of provisions for the survivors, especially of bread. He also had reinforcements of troops sent from Rome.

Dead 40,000.

The estimate of the number of dead remains in the neighborhood of 40,000. Fifty towns and villages have been destroyed. The following list of dead in damaged but not destroyed villages in the Sulmona district is now available:

Cilialago 25, Balsano 4, Scanno 200, Popoli 5, Pentina 4, Barrea 12. The mortality in the country where many farm houses and buildings collapsed is as yet unascertained.

In Avezzano, three babies, only slightly injured, have been taken from the ruins. Four children, the eldest eleven, were also found. Although exhausted they kept shouting until they were saved. They promised the soldiers who dug them out that their father would pay them, but he was found dead in the ruins nearby. A girl who was also saved uninjured from a neighboring building asked the soldiers whether it was dawn. She said she felt that she had slept a long time, but could not see the light. Eight rescues was the result of an entire day's work by 20,000 soldiers which shows the enormity of the task confronting the government.

At Isoladelliri the main church collapsed completely and is reduced to a heap of ruins, but the statue of St. Restituta, the town's patron saint, was untouched and is intact, even to the finger on a hand which is raised in blessing.

Pope Orders Collections.

The pope has ordered collections for the relief of the sufferers in the churches throughout Italy and is personally providing relief from the vatican, thus virtually co-operating with the government.

SEVERE FIGHTING IN FLANDERS REPORTED

Paris Claims Allies Drove Germans from Trenches.

Paris, Jan. 18.—Severe fighting in Flanders, near Arras, in the region of Perthes and north of the farm of Beausejour, with a decided advantage for the allies, is reported in the official communiques of the French war office today. At Nieuport the Belgians and French pushed forward and drove the Germans from their entrenched line in the sand dunes, at the same time destroying a fort from which the enemy had been debouching and doing considerable execution.

Quiet still prevails at Soissons, but further to the east, at Troyon, the Germans made an attack but were checked. The afternoon communique also reports that the allies' artillery is again proving its superiority over German ordnance.

Operations in Alsace are apparently at a standstill. No news of moment has been received from there for more than a week.

ITS TROUBLES YET REMAIN

La Salle Trust and Savings Bank Passes Out of Existance.

Chicago, Jan. 18.—The La Salle Street Trust and Savings bank passed out of existence today when a formal decree of dissolution was entered by Circuit Judge Windes. While the dissolution marks the legal "death" of the institution, litigation and monetary loss will worry some 11,000 depositors and the 250 stock holders for many months to come.

The decree, agreed upon in court yesterday, reviews the checkered career of the bank after its transformation into a state bank from the old La Salle Street National bank. It charges William C. Niblack, appointed receiver a month after the bank was closed by Bank Examiner D. V. Harkin, on June 12, 1914, with the duty of closing up its affairs and paying off the depositors as best may be.

Quincy, Ill., Jan. 18.—Glenn N. Keefe, formerly of Lafayette, Ind., known in newspaper circles as "Pat" Keefe, for several years associate editor of Quincy Whig, and Miss Nellie Quinlan of this city were married here in St. Peter's Catholic church.

SON OF DEACON HELD AS OPTION VIOLATOR

Cadillac Police Promise to Get More in Liquor Crusade.

Cadillac, Mich., Jan. 18.—Wexford county jail holds more prisoners than ever before, as the result of the wholesale arrest of alleged bootleggers and local option violaters when seven men were taken on various charges.

Police say there will be others jailed, including a prominent county and city official. Those arrested are W. J. Allen, Carl Gustafson, Will Simmerson, Dick Austin, William Smith, Gus Johnson, Joe Phillips.

Phillips pleaded guilty to selling liquor while the others pleaded not guilty and demanded examinations which are set for today. Several of the men are prominent and Gustafson is the son of a deacon of the Swedish Lutheran church and one of the city's most respected citizens.

GOD OF LOVE IS BANISHED

Daniel J. Cupid Can Only Make Trouble at U. of M. Hospital.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 18.—Daniel J. Cupid, the young man who has a habit of getting his picture taken without over dressing for the occasion, has been barred from the university hospital. Nurses and nurses in training have been forbidden to become engaged while in the employ of the institution. Those who have already "gone and done it" must resign, or break their engagements. Love making, according to the management, musses up efficiency. A nurse who is dreaming of her beloved is likely to stick a thermometer into a patient's eye instead of his mouth and leave the monkey wrench and screw driver where the victim's appendicitis used to be. Such things are frowned upon in the best circles. It is no longer good form to hide the family hardware in an unsuspecting patient.

Hence the edict chasing D. J. Cupid off the lot. There is enough gloom among the internes and nurses here now to furnish a large and commodious morgue.

WOULD PUT TAX ON CHILDREN

Olivet President Says Levy Would Develop "Social Responsibility."

Olivet, Mich., Jan. 18.—"Children of five should be taxed," declared President Lancaster in psychology class at Olivet college. "If the sum were not more than 1 cent the child should be made to pay that much in person to a tax collector."

President Lancaster said that the fault with modern society was that it developed too late the sense in the child that he is a part of the social system. By this taxation, he says, it would be forcibly brought to the child's notice that he is receiving protection from fire, violence, etc., and that he owes something in return.

Steals Mother's Food.

Port Huron, Mich., Jan. 18.—Joseph Hoffman, a paroled convict, was arrested charged with stealing a "half side" of pork from his aged mother. She had put it away to carry her through the winter. Hoffman sold the pork for $1.50 and drank up the proceeds. He will be returned to Ionia.

Saginaw, Mich., Jan. 18.—Merle C. Shannon has complained to the police that his house was fired. Shannon was awakened by his dog, which saved the lives of the inmates of the house.

Illinois Mines Resume Work.

Danville, Ill., Jan. 18.—During the last few days more than 500 miners have been put to work in the Danville mining district, after having been idle since last November. It is expected that more men will be given work the first of the week.

TO PROBE FRAUDS IN RHODE ISLAND

Department of Justice to Take up Election Charges.

Providence, R. I., Jan. 18.—The announcement made from Washington that the department of justice has decided to investigate reports of bribery and corruption alleged to have been practised in Rhode Island in the November election, came as a complete surprise to the leaders of the Republican and Democratic parties and there is considerable speculation as to the identity of the individual who has succeeded in interesting the attorney general. Rhode Island went over with a hard thump to the Republicans, which in fact, in addition to the disquietude of the wage workers owing to diminishing employment, was attributed to the free use of money. While Rhode Island has a secret ballot system, this has never succeeded in thwarting vote manipulators who were declared to have been very active in the November election. Generally there was free distribution of beer, after voters had been to the polls and the law requiring saloons to be closed on Monday were dodged by saloon men who openly peddled bottled goods in the vicinity of the polling places in the country towns. On the morning after the election it was published here that North Providence had offered a choice example of how to run an election on the most approved bribery plan. Here the Republican managers were alleged not only to have lavishly issued brass checks redeemable at selected saloons illegally run, but that there was what was designated as the "mysterious hand." Those who had arranged to sell their votes were declared to have been escorted from the polling place to a room, across which hung a curtain with a slit in the center. Behind this screen stood the purveyor of the bribe fund who, when the candidate had been stood before the curtain and on the receipt of a signal thrust through his hand, delivered a two dollar bill to the candidate, who was then led away to make room for the next vote seller. It is claimed that $2,500 was given out in this way.

A Great Service

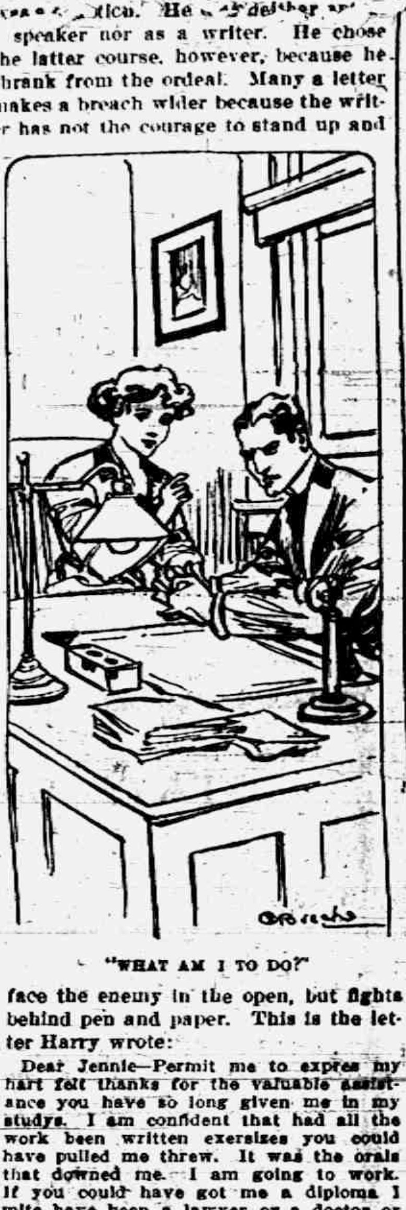
It Was Rendered by a Typist

By F. A. MITCHEL

Harry Beale and Jennie MacArthur had the same advantage as to education—that is, they both went to the same public school. Harry was a poor scholar, and Jenny was a good one. Harry would be out with the boys, playing marbles for keeps or plugging tops, winning all the marbles and the tops, while Jennie was getting her lessons and Harry's too. She wrote his compositions for him, made his grammar diagrams—indeed filled the gap of his deficiencies so far as those deficiencies could be filled by another.

In this way she dragged her boy lover through the grammar school. He was considered by his teachers weak in spots, they not knowing that the spots were parts of his school work in which Jennie could not do for him. The two children went to the high school together, and there it was the same, only, the work being more difficult, Jennie failed to get him on as before, and he had a harder time of it every year till the fourth and last, when his record was so bad that it was decided by his parents to take him out of school.

By this time both he and his sweetheart had outgrown childhood, and something of formality had come between them. On dropping out of school Harry considered that it behooved him to thank his coach for the assistance she had given him, but how to do this was a [illegible]. He [illegible] a speaker nor as a writer. He chose the latter course, however, because he shrank from the ordeal. Many a letter makes a breach wider because the writer has not the courage to stand up and face the enemy in the open, but fights behind pen and paper. This is the letter Harry wrote:



"WHAT AM I TO DO?"

Dear Jennie—Permit me to expres my hart felt thanks for the valuable assistance you have so long given me in my studys. I am confident that had all the work been written exersizes you could have pulled me threw. It was the orals that downed me. I am going to work. If you could have got me a diploma I mite have been a lawyer or a doctor or something of that sort. As it is I can only grub in the durt. Eny way I shall try to make monny so I may some day be of benefit to you. Yours cinserely,

HENRY BEALE.

Jennie's eyes moistened on reading this letter. She had hoped for Harry's sake that she might pull him along far enough to get him into college and that there he might scrape through by himself. Now, as he had put it, he must grub in the dirt. She put his letter in a little Japanese box some one had given her for Christmas and went about her own work with her usual steadiness of purpose.

Having graduated at the high school, Jennie, being expected to make her own living, entered upon a career of teaching. She could not afford to go to college, but while she taught the lower grades prepared herself by home study for the higher ones. Being naturally bright, she made good progress and, being gifted in imparting knowledge, advanced steadily. Nevertheless the pay of most teachers is not great, and $800 is as high a salary as Jennie ever received.

Harry obtained a position in a feed store, with the prospect of lifting bags, thereby getting his clothes covered with a white dust instead of wearing the neat apparel of a doctor or a lawyer. One day Jennie went past the store where he was employed and, seeing him roll a barrel across the floor, sighed at the failure of her efforts to lift him to something better. But Harry, if not gifted to learn from books, had a natural faculty for making a bargain. As a boy he had a faculty, as has been mentioned, for gathering unto himself all the tops and marbles of the other boys, and as a youth he continued to show the same trait in making a profit out of everything he touched. He soon left the feed store and bought out with a handful of cash and a bushel of credit a business for himself. But before he had got settled down to it he sold it at a profit and bought something else. Every one said: "Harry Beale will never get on in the world. He is a rolling stone and will gather no moss." At one time he would be a contractor, at another a farmer, though he never kept a farm long enough to prove that he knew anything about farming.

He did not forget the sweetheart of his school days, but it seemed to him that one of such inferior intellectual capacity as himself should not aspire to a woman so far above him in brain power. Or rather it occurred to him that, he and Jennie having passed out of childhood, this difference in them would separate them farther and farther as they grew older. A woman, he argued, must look up to her husband; the moment she looks down upon him she ceases to love him.

But Henry Beale is not the first person who has attempted to analyze the female human heart to find that it is not to be analyzed. At any rate, there is a multitude of exceptions to all rules that can be laid down concerning it.

Miss MacArthur continued to teach on a salary that was no more than she required to live on. She had no especial faculty for making a dollar serve for two—indeed, it was all she could do to make it serve for one. Though she possessed high intellectual capacity, the demand for it was not great. She lived in a small place where only mediocrity was required. What use therefore were her attainments?

Meanwhile Henry Beale, engaged in groveling pursuits, was extending them. His bank account was all the while growing and his operations all the while enlarging. He was not quite thirty years old when he had a small army of employees about him. He did not need to send out misspelled letters, for he had a dozen typists at his command, any one of whom could put in excellent English whatever he chose to say, and, being systematic, he had made Webster's Dictionary the rule of his office. He had no occasion to regret not having learned to spell, for he could hire spellers for a song. When he wrote his communications, instead of dictating them he felt sure that "business" would not be spelled "bizness" or "excellent" "exselent."

One day Beale met a friend of his old sweetheart, who told him that Jennie was wearing herself out teaching. Harry wondered if she would not in her poverty consider such a stupid man as himself for a husband. Unfortunately his old distaste for facing a superior intellectual being again stood in his way. He could not write the English language or spell any better than he had done a dozen years before. If he proposed to his old sweetheart he must either do so verbally or by means of a dictated letter, for he had never had time to learn to use a typewriter himself, and if he had had time it would not have helped his spelling. Since he could not muster courage to propose to one he considered so far above him he was forced to use the latter plan. He wrote out his proposal—it seemed altogether too sacred to dictate—and gave it to a typist to put in proper shape on paper.

Miss MacArthur [illegible] fully printed document from her schoolboy lover declaring that his love was as strong as ever; that he was aware he was her inferior and if she married him she would look down upon him; that he wished to serve her, and the only condition under which he could do so was as her husband. Would she marry him? Not a word was spelled incorrectly; not a sentence was bungled.

The day after this letter was sent Mr. Beale called his typist into his office. She carried her implements with her, supposing she was to take down a dictation. On entering she saw at once that her chief had received a setback of some sort. He handed her a letter from Jennie MacArthur addressed to him stating that she had no reply to make to a typewritten letter on such a subject as a proposition of marriage.

"What do you think of that?" he said woefully.

"I think that it is a very proper statement of the case."

"What am I to do?"

"If I were you, Mr. Beale, I would send the letter you gave me to put in type."

"Corrected by you?"

"Corrected by no one."

Mr. Beale groaned. "And that is your advice?" he said.

"It is. If this lady will accept you she will accept you as you are and not as what you are not."

"But her reply shows how she regards me. She will decline my proposition."

"She will not."

"Why do you say that so confidently?"

"Because her reply indicates that what is between you and her is too sacred to be transmitted by a third person. Had she intended to decline your proposition she would doubtless have not been particular about who wrote it."

"Very well, Miss Morton; please send her the original letter."

The letter was sent and a reply was received written on the back of the letter Beale had written his sweetheart when he left school. Miss MacArthur began by saying that she had treasured his letter for a dozen years as the nearest to her heart of anything she possessed. His proposition was accepted, and it was evident from the tone of the reply that the hand bestowed was accompanied by the heart.

On the receipt of this epistle Mr. Beale called his typist into his office and handed her a check for $1,000. Astonished, the lady asked what it was for.

"For the greatest service you have ever done me," was the reply.

Handling Coins.

Coin handling machines have reached such a degree of perfection that a machine will take a bucketful of coins of all denominations, sort them out, pick out all the mutilated pieces and reject them, do all the others up in neat bundles of standard sizes—such as twenty-five pennies in a bundle—count them, add them all up together, and hand out a slip of paper on which is printed the total sum in dollars and cents. An electric motor turns the crank that does the work.

An Autograph Hunter's Ingenuity.

No autograph hunter ever displayed greater ingenuity and knowledge of human nature than the Newcastle (England) man who in the fifties wrote to a number of famous men intimating a desire to give their illustrious names to vessels he was building. Sentimental replies with the coveted autographs poured in, and even Carlyle was moved to write hoping that "the vessel would sail in larger and deeper waters than had ever been reached by the man whose name it bore."

The Downy Woodpecker.

An examination of 723 stomachs of the downy woodpecker showed that 76 per cent of the diet was composed of insects and 24 per cent vegetable matter. The former consists largely of beetles that bore into timber or burrow under the bark. Caterpillars amount to 16 per cent of the food, including many harmful species. Grasshoppers and ants are freely eaten, and the vegetable food is composed of small fruit and seeds mostly of the wild species.

WORRY.

Do not worry; eat three square meals a day; say your prayers; be courteous to your creditors; keep your digestion good; exercise; go slow and go easy. Maybe there are other things that your special case requires to make you happy, but, my friend, these I reckon will give you a good lift.—Abraham Lincoln.

The Boy Next Door

Story of the Two Jims

By FRANK M. O'BRIEN

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Two little houses side by side in what the rest of the city called "Shantytown" held two boys who had known each other all their lives and who had until now lived those lives exactly the same.

From veriest brathood the red head of James Doherty and the black head of James Moore had bobbed along together.

They had dived from the same stringpiece on the docks, drunk from the same ink bottle at school, and each had honored the Great Telegraph company by entering its service on the same day.

But now their lives had come to a fork in the road and separated, for, though each lay with closed eyes in his respective little attic room in his respective little house, James the Red was only thinking, thinking hard, but James the Black was dying—dying hard.

In the abstraction caused by grief for his friend, however, James the Red had ceased to be useful to the messenger service of his employers.

There was nothing to do but loaf, and the Red could not stand off the fascination of sitting at his window watching the Black's window and listening for the scream that came at intervals from the sick boy.

When Jimmy went [illegible] to supper [illegible] mother told him that Jimmy—the Black—was still alive.

At 8 o'clock James the Red found himself with enough courage to go to the Moore door. He wanted to see Jimmy, please.

"Nobody can see him, the doctor says," said Mrs. Moore.

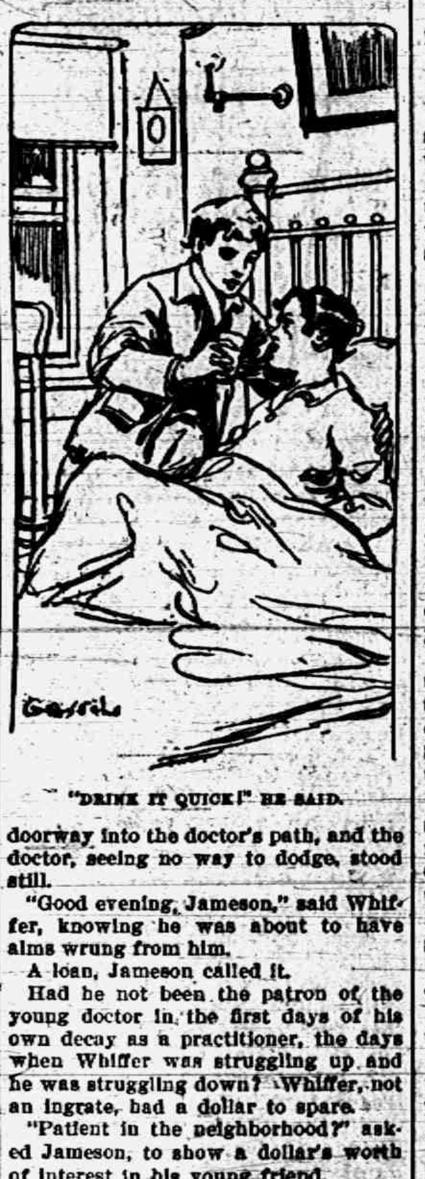
As Jimmy turned to go Dr. Whiffer came out, very young and very important.

He ran quickly down the steps of the front stoop and started up the street.

James the Red went after him.

He wanted to know whether Jimmy would get well—whether something couldn't be done about the screaming.

But just as the questions were framed an obstacle came from a saloon doorway into the doctor's path, and the doctor, seeing no way to dodge, stood still.



"DRINK IT QUICK!" HE SAID.

"Good evening, Jameson," said Whiffer, knowing he was about to have alms wrung from him.

A loan, Jameson called it.

Had he not been the patron of the young doctor in the first days of his own decay as a practitioner, the days when Whiffer was struggling up and he was struggling down? Whiffer, not an ingrate, had a dollar to spare.

"Patient in the neighborhood?" asked Jameson, to show a dollar's worth of interest in his young friend.

"Boy with typhoid pneumonia," said Whiffer.

"I used to have lots of 'em," said Jameson. "They're usually tough jobs too."

"This is bad," replied Whiffer. "Tough youngster, but it's hard to beat the disease off when it has malnutrition on its side. A poor family like this can't afford to have a trained nurse to pump in the strychnine when the heart begins to go. If he holds out tonight he'll pull through, I think."

Jameson's eyes, pale and wet as they were, kindled reminiscently.

"I had to tackle a case in camp once when there wasn't any strychnine to use when the crisis came," he said, "and nothing else in the drug line was handy, either.

"I found a cure out of my own noodle," continued the rummy one. "When the man was fading and I had to do something, champagne was handy, and I poured about a quart of it into him. Well, I remember poking the fizz into the fellow at 4 o'clock in the morning and nobody about to dispute my judgment," he said as he shambled away.

James the Red stood still. What he had learned was discouraging.

He wandered the streets until 10 o'clock and then went home.

His mother had more news of the patient. Jimmy the Black was very weak, but his fever seemed to be going down, and he slept most of the time.

James the Red went to his room, made ready for bed, put out his light and went to sit at the window which looked upon the sickroom.

And so, watching and listening, he fell asleep. At last, dreaming he was weeping, he woke. One o'clock and silence!

Darkness, too, but for the lamp through the open window in the room of James the Black.

No movement was there, for the tired women, finding their boy asleep, had crept away to the rest they needed so much.

From a cigar box in a closet came a revolver which must have cost $1.20 when it was new and which had cost nothing on the happy day when young Mr. Doherty captured it in honorable combat.

It wouldn't shoot, and James the Red knew it, but he was going to see James the Black—peaceably if he could; if not, then by force of arms.

The surreptitious entrance appealed to him more than the loud and dramatic, hence the sneakers.

He left his own house without sound or challenge and from the yard surveyed the job to be done. It was simple.

Across the street was the house of Henkel, the painter, and Henkel had every style ladder but Jacob's. James the Red chose one twelve feet long.

He crept to the sidewalk and surveyed the street. No sound—therefore no cop!

He lugged the ladder to his own yard and, staggering, raised the end to the window where the light burned. The ladder, as if a conspirator, never creaked, and presently the Red poked his head into the dimly lighted room.

On the bed lay the wraith of his friend, hollow cheeked and white—a sight that made the Red's throat close.

He crept into the room, silent as a thief and feeling like one. Not until he had reached the head of the bed did he whisper:

"Jimmy!"

The sick boy's eyelids rose slowly as if the weight of death had been on them, and his eyes, dull of expression, moved toward the intruder.

"'Lo, Jim!" he gasped.

Then his eyes closed again as if the effort had been great.

"How d'ye feel?" Jim asked. The eyes slowly opened again.

"I'm all cool now," said Jimmy faintly. "I've been so hot, and now I feel sleepy—awfully sleepy."

The eyes closed again, but the boy in the bed spoke once more.

"Why do all the flowers have stars in them?" he asked dreamily.

James the Red had watched his own cousin die months before.

Out of the window he went and down the ladder into the street.

It was raining in earnest and the night was black.

An hour went by.

"Jimmy!"

The eyelids lifted weakly.

James the Red knelt on the floor, but not in prayer.

He had taken a blanket from the bed, and in its folds was something with which he struggled.

An explosion, muffled by the blanket, announced his triumph.

He held a glassful of foaming, jumping stuff to Jimmy's face.

"Drink it quick!" he said.

"I never take no booze," said James the Black. "I never will touch it."

"This ain't booze," said James the Red.

What was a lie to him now?

"Drink it!"

He put his arm around the Black's shoulders and, lifting his head, poured the stimulant between his lips.

The sick one made a face. He took the next dose in silence and, when the third was ready, took it with a little sigh.

"Jimmy," he whispered twenty minutes later, "feet gettin' warmer now. Give s'more medicine!"

But Jim, with the caution of a nurse, withheld the flagon. It was half empty, and he guessed that that would do.

"I'm going, kid," said James the Red. But James the Black made no reply. He was snoring.

He was still snoring when Dr. Whiffer came at 5 o'clock and gave a verdict that made Mrs. Moore weep with joy.

In the complaint book of a police station was written, synchronously with the beginning of the Black's convalescence, an article from the pen of one Sergeant Mulqueen, famed for his terseness:

"An undersized young man in messenger boy's uniform rang the basement bell at the home of Henry Z. Carstairs, 20 Remington avenue, early this morning and, flourishing a pistol, held up the butler and forced him to give him a bottle of champagne. The butler says the fellow looked like a desperate criminal."

Newspapers of the day, in an effort to gild the rhetorical lily, added that Mr. Carstairs was a leading citizen who founded the Great Telegraph company and made a fortune thereby.

Dog Specks.

The phantom dog specter was one of the hardest of old English superstitions. Almost every county had its black dog which haunted its lonely spots and was the dread of every native. Most of them were regarded as devils, but some were held to be the spirits of human beings, transformed thus as a punishment. Lady Howard, a Devon notable of the days of James I., for instance, was said to be compelled to haunt Okehampton in the form of a dog as a punishment for her cruelty to her daughter.

The Women of Belgium.

No one can travel in Belgium without being struck by the extraordinary activity and prominence of the women. Over the doors of shops of all descriptions the name of the owner or owners is frequently followed by "Sisters" or "Widow." You find them proprietors of hotels and restaurants. They are often custodians of the churches. They are employed to tow the boats along the canal banks. They cut up the meat in the butchers' shops, and they are even to be noticed shoeing horses at the forge.—Liverpool Mercury.

Greek Meets Greek.

A certain college professor who writes a fearful hand tells this story at his own expense. He had written a marginal comment on one of the student's themes, and shortly afterward the student came to him and said:

"Professor C., I was unable to read what you wrote on my paper, and my parents also could not decipher it. I then called on my uncle, a lawyer, and he finally managed to read it for me."

RIGHT LIVING.

Live right today and it will be a step toward living right tomorrow. No man has any right to expect to live differently tomorrow from the way in which he is living today. What he chooses for today he chooses for tomorrow. What he overcomes today he is overcoming for tomorrow. Yet most of us live as though we did not believe this, and we try hard to persuade ourselves that we are safe in so living.

"IMMENSE", SAID REAR—ADMIRAL BADGER.

The world's mightiest naval unit—the U. S. Fleet—will be seen in review at the Bradley Opera house, next Tuesday January 26, when Lyman H. Howe will present his remarkable reproduction photographed by authority of Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Josephus Daniels.

The average civilian reads now and then of progress made and the increased efficiency of our navy, but at best he can only realize in a most vague way how tremendous are the strides that have been made even in the last few months.

These are so great that it has kept even naval experts busy to "keep up to the minute", and this film is now presented in order to give the general public an opportunity to realize the amazing efficiency attained.

An idea of the swift progress made, is indicated by the fact that what is known today as the U. S. Fleet is equal to about three fleets like that which Roosevelt sent round the globe a few short years ago.

For instance, the Wyoming with its sister ship, the Arkansas, on both of which Howe's camera men made their homes for months, are easily the equal in fighting power of any 10 of the battleships sailed around the world; yet, mighty as they are, there will be in the fleet which will sail through the Panama Canal at least four ships as far ahead of the Wyoming and Arkansas as these ships are ahead of the minor dreadnaughts which were considered so formidable a few years ago, such as the Michigan or Connecticut.

"Immense! I congratulate you," said Rear Admiral Badger upon viewing this remarkable reproduction. What appealed so strongly to him was not alone the spectacular phases of the series but also the thoroughness that characterized the work of the camera men in filming the minute and manifold duties on board ship.

Another feature contrasting the Philippines of Today and Yesterday brings home to Americans the modes of life of the wild tribes in days gone by and how Uncle Sam has transformed their lives. It is an impressive pictorial lesson of what can be achieved by tactful patience and skillful guidance. How their confidence and friendship was won, and how they have turned from war and head-hunting to peaceful industrial pursuits should be seen by every good American.

Quickly Relieved.

"Mother," she asked, "that ink that father writes with isn't indelible ink, is it?"

"No, dear," was the reply.

"Oh, I'm so glad of that," cried the child.

"Why, dear?" queried the mother.

"Why," said Hannah, "I've spilt it all over the library rug."—Boston Herald.

"Dat's where youse is wrong," replied the unlaundered hobo. "I wunst had a sweetheart wot was a dead ringer fer youse."

"And did she die?" asked the angular spinster as she helped him to another hunk of pie.

"No, ma'am," answered the hobo. "When leap year come round she asked me t' marry her—an' I run away from home."—Chicago News.

Judge Enjoins Firing of Policeman Who Plead Guilty at Indianapolis.

Terre Haute, Ind., Jan. 18.—A temporary restraining order, prohibiting Mayor Donn M. Roberts, members of the board of public safety, Sylvester Doyle, superintendent of police, and Jesse Felthoff, night superintendent, from dismissing or removing Robert S. Lloyd, a patrolman was issued by Judge Fred W. Beal of the superior court.

Lloyd was one of the eighty men who pleaded guilty in the United States District court recently to a charge of conspiracy to commit election frauds. His action was taken to prevent Mayor Roberts from carrying into effect his announced purpose of dismissing all city employes who pleaded guilty.

Weather for Tomorrow.

Bullet Wounds.

The entrance wound caused by the modern small arm bullet is not a gruesome spectacle. It is small, and its appearance has been compared to that produced by the bite of a certain parasite insect. Often there is but little external bleeding, but this is not to be taken as a danger signal, as might be popularly supposed.—London Telegraph.

COMMON SENSE.

If we will only do our best; if we do not, as we are tempted to, magnify trifling troubles; if we look resolutely, I do not say at the bright side of things, but at things as they really are; if we avail ourselves of the manifold blessings which surround us, we cannot but feel that life is indeed a glorious inheritance.—Sir John Lubbock.

YOUR WORK.

When you get discontented because circumstances have decreed you should do work you do not like, remember that, even if you could have chosen your own path in life, you would probably have got discontented sometimes. Training ourselves to work faithfully, even though we do not like the work, helps to eradicate the tendency to self indulgence to which we are all inclined.

Don't forget the meeting at the Presbyterian church Wednesday evening. Rev. Ray Atwood the State Sunday School Superintendent will speak after which a conference meeting will be held with the Sunday School board.

JOHN McKENDRY.

John McKendry died at his home in Macon Tuesday morning, Jan. 12th, and was buried the 14th. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Rex of the Presbyterian church and were attended by a large company of relatives and friends.

[illegible] in Antrim country, Ireland, Sept 12, 1852, and 40 years ago was united in marriage to Rose Mary Aicken who has proved a noble helpmeet.

He had been ailing but a few months and his friends did not realize how seriously ill he was until a short time ago when he took a decided change for the worse. In spite of every attention given him, he was unable to rally, and passed away.

He leaves a faithful and devoted wife, two brothers and five sisters beside a host of friends to mourn the loss of one who was ever kind and affectionate.

He was laid to rest in beautiful Brookside cemetery

CARD OF THANKS

To the kind friends who have so generously and untiringly given us their services during the illness of our husband and brother, we are very grateful. We feel that it is a debt we can never repay for the comfort they have been in sharing with us the burden we could not have borne alone. We wish to also thank the minister for his comforting words, the singers and for the beautiful flowers.

MR. AND MRS. ROBT. HERRISON,
MR. AND MRS. JAMES FOSTER.

MISPLACED BLAME FOR THE WAR

Is God responsible? The rulers of all the Powers now engaged in war have all, with a single exception, laid the responsibility upon God. Thanks to the unspeakable Turk for unsheathing his sword without crying, "Allah il Allah!" It is unthinkable that God should be the author of War, since his other name is Love. He came all the way from heaven to say so. On the slopes of Olivet he taught it: "Love your enemies; bless them that curse you: pray for them that despitefully you." On the cross he exemplified it: "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do."

No; war is of the Prince of Darkness. By very name he is the adversary of both God and man. The dripping sword is bathed in hell; the burning brand is kindled in hell.—The Christian Herald.

SUPERVISORS VOTE ON QUESTION OF WET OR DRY

Voting Resulted In a Victory For the Wets

At the recent meeting of Supervisors in Adrian the question of wet or dry was throughly discussed and three times the vote was taken resulting in favor of the wets.

Now Lenawee County will have to vote on the question of local option at the spring election

It is thought the action of the Supervisors may be tested in the Courts, and that the Anti-Saloon league will investigate the villidity of the petitions especially in one of the wards in Adrian.

Mrs. Rose Barrow will take a two months vacation from her duties at the Webster Anderson Co store, beginning tomorrow.

MRS. A. W. SLAYTON

Cynthia Goodwin Slayton passed away at her home in Ann Arbor Sunday night, 12:30. The remains will be brought here for burial tonight and taken to the home of John Orr. Burial Wednesday on the family lot in Brookside. A daughter Miss Ethel Slayton and a sister Mrs C. L. Train of Spring City, Tenn., with a host of relatives and friends are left to mourn her loss.

A brief service will be held at 10:30 a. m. Wednesday.

IF BILLY LIVED IN LENAWEE.

"I'd as soon be a devil in hell stirring pitch with my crowd as to be a man with my name on a whiskey petition."—Wm. A. Sunday.

The above was sent by one of the honorary W. C. T. U. members to the meeting last Wednesday.

If Billy lived in Lenawee, we wonder what he'd think?
And if the water was too wet, wonder what he'd drink?
And what would he consider a really sane condition
To justify a man in signing the petition?
If Billy lived in Lenawee, we wonder what he do?
Would he join for protection the W. C. T. U.?
And march after their banner so proudly in the town,
Resolved at every chance he got to put poor liquor down?
If Billy lived in Lenawee, the campaign would be hot;
As a shouter for local option be Johnny on the spot;
And when he votes were counted and everything went well,
He sure would not be stirring pitch with "a devil in hell."
—Hudson Post.

CHAS. A. SELLON'S MERRIEST OF ALL MUSICAL EXTRAVAGANZAS

THE CAT AND THE FIDDLE

As the title indicates the play tells a wonderful story, the doings of the people of the Mystical Isle of Eye, in connection with some of our own earth beings The motif in brief is this; In the far away mythical Isle of Eye, Great Gobs and Circe rule, their reign to be as long as the eye is kept open, which closes but once in a hundred years, when a sacrifice in the guise of a maiden marked with a strawberry on her left arm must be offered to appease the mighty power, and continue the reign. Gobs and Circe have dethroned the rightful ruler, the Genii and her Gigantic Cat are in search of the sacrifice and we find her in America, spiriting the girl and her friends away to take a cruise on the wonderful ship DIANA. They sail and finally come within the wishing rays of the wonderful Eye; Great Gobs sinks the ship and all are washed onto the isle. Here they are about to triumph and offer the maiden Polly as the sacrifice when the Genii and Cat appear, having been released from their prison by one "Happy" a child of fortune, and the plot is foiled. Finally Polly and her friends are rescued from an airship, the Genii and Cat placed in command of the Isle and all ends well.

Mr. Sellon has in the past given the style of entertainments appealed to all the theatre-going people and also the children. The numerous scenic changes, the electrical effects, the many changes of pretty costumes, combined with some very astounding trick scenic effects, and blended all things with the whistling, tinkling music and song numbers, keep an audience in a jolly mood, and the neat, clean comedy, devoid of all suggestiveness, make these extravaganzas just what they are intended for, a tonic for the blues and a rest for tired men and women.

A company of twenty-five clever people, with Chas. A. Sellon, himself, in the role of "Happy" constitute the personnel of "The Cat and the Fiddle" and a complete scenic and electrical production is carried for the entire fifteen scenes, as the 15 big musical numbers form the greater part of the entertainment. The Adrian orchestra (which plays the show the night before coming here) has been engaged to furnish the music. A big expense to the local management but goes to show that nothing will be left undone to give Tecumseh theatre goers these productions exactly as seen in the larger cities.

"The Cat and the Fiddle" will be at the Bradley Opera House, this week Friday, January 22 The seat sale opens at Hay's Bakery Thursday morning at 8 A. M.

NEW MASONIC TEMPLE FOR ADRIAN

A kitchen dining room, and an auditorium large enough to accommodate any large gathering are also among their plans.

ENTERTAINED AT DINNER

Mrs. Frank Nyland was hostess Friday at a six o'clock dinner honoring her sister Miss Nellie Tannis of Kalamazoo. A fine two course dinner was served covers being laid for twenty guests. Capitals and Armies.

Twice the United States has lost its capital to a foreign foe, but neither time did it produce much effect upon the war. The first time was when Howe's redcoats swept into Philadelphia after the battle of Brandywine. The other occasion was when another British army seized and burned Washington. What Howe needed to end the war in 1777 was not Philadelphia, but Washington's army, and that he didn't get. A country's army is worth a dozen capitals. The British captured America's three largest cities, Boston, New York and Philadelphia, but that availed them little in the long run.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Temple of Zeus.

All that remains of the great temple of Zeus, which was 700 years in building, is to be found about 150 yards from the foot of the Acropolis at Athens. The ruins consist of sixteen columns of the Corinthian order, six and one-half feet in diameter and sixty feet high. It was the second largest temple erected by the Greeks, one superior to it in size being the temple of Diana at Ephesus. According to a legend, its foundation was built by Deucalion, the Greek Noah, who from this point witnessed the waters of the flood subside. An opening in the ground is said to be the orifice through which the flood disappeared.

A Diplomatic Awakening.

It was in September, 1870, when M. Thiers on his desperate mission for his country was visited by Lord Granville in London. Thiers set forth the case of France at length, and Lord Granville was about to reply when he saw that Thiers had sunk back with his eyes closed, and, leaning over the chair, he could detect no signs of breathing. Believing that Thiers had suddenly died, Lord Granville was about to call for help. But he resolved to make sure, so as to avoid the awkwardness of a mistake, by poking the fire and letting the firelrons fall with a clang. Thiers instantly woke up and went on talking as if nothing had happened.—London Opinion.

Local and Standard Time.

What is called standard time—that is, railroad time, is uniform within each of the four sections into which the country is divided from east to west. And each section differs from that next to it by exactly one hour. Local time—that is, sun time, is faster or slower than standard time, according to locality. Standard time is four minutes slower than true local time at New York, sixteen minutes slower than local time at Indianapolis, ten minutes slower at Chicago, one minute faster at St. Louis, nineteen minutes faster at Kansas City and ten minutes faster at San Francisco.—Philadelphia Press.

What She Wanted

"I want to stop my baby's cough," said a young mother Tuesday, "but I won't give him any harmful drugs." She bought Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. It loosens the cough quickly, stimulates the mucus membranes and helps throw off the choking secretion, eases pain and gives the child normal rest.

For Men and Women

Backache! Feel tired? Not so spry as you used to be? Getting old? Many persons mistake kidney trouble for advancing age. Kidneys out of order make you feel old before your time. Foley Kidney Pills tone up and invigorate the kidneys, banish backache, rid your blood of acids and poisons. Sold by all druddists of Tecumseh. adv

Hard to Explain.

It was a soulful night, and they sat together in the parlor. The following conversation was going on:

He—I gave you that parrot as a birthday present, did I not, Matilda? She—Yes; but surely, Albert, you are not going to speak of your gifts as if— He—It was young and speechless at the time? She—Yes (with increasing wonder), and it has never been out of this parlor. He—There are no other young ladies in this house? She—No, there are not. He—Then why—why, when I kissed your photograph in your album while waiting for you did that wretched bird imitate your voice and say, "Don't do that, Charlie; please don't?"—Exchange.

Got All He Asked For.

Another "meanest man" has been found. He lives in the city and conducts a thriving business. The other day a seedy individual approached him and said: "Say, mister, I'm hungry and would like to get a nickel to get a cup of coffee and a roll. I have four pennies and only need one more. Please give me a penny."

The man after searching himself said: "I haven't got a penny. All I have is a nickel. Give me your four cents in change, and I will give you the nickel."

The beggar requests that his name be not mentioned in connection with the item.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Laughed and Won.

When the British were storming Badajoz the Duke of Wellington rode up and, observing an artilleryman particularly active, inquired the man's name. He was answered "Taylor."

"A very good name too," said the duke. "Cheer up, my men! Our Taylor will soon make a pair of breaches in the walls!"

At this sally the men forgot their danger, a burst of laughter broke from them and the next charge carried the fortress.—London Answers.

A Composer's Compliment.

Wagner once said he would prefer to go to Vienna to hear the waltzes of Strauss to hearing Italian opera. On a birthday of Mme. Strauss some years ago she had as guests many celebrated musicians. She passed around a fan on which the different composers and players were writing their names and excerpts from compositions of their own. When it reached Brahms he penned the first measure of the "Blue Danube" waltz and signed beneath, "Not, I regret to say, by your devoted friend Johannes Brahms."

A Back Number.

"I wouldn't dream of marrying him. Why, he said he would do everything to make me happy."

"What is wrong about that?"

"He ought to know that humans are put on earth to fulfill missions, not to be happy."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Jerrold as a Cynic.

Ugliest of trades have their moments of pleasure. If I were a gravedigger or even a hangman there are some people I could work for with a great deal of enjoyment.—Douglas Jerrold.

Built on Weather Forecasts.

Study of the weather reports from day to day helped an Iowa man to build up one of the largest wholesale fruit businesses in the middle west. His method was simple. Most small fruits and particularly strawberries and raspberries spoil easily when picked wet. This man shifted his orders so as to avoid buying from sections subjected to recent rain. A result was that he gained a reputation throughout the trade for the excellent quality of his stock.—World's Work.

Tests of Civilization.

It is only vulgar minds that mistake bigness for greatness, for greatness is of the soul, not of the body. In the judgment which history will hereafter pass upon the forty centuries of recorded progress toward civilization, that now lie behind us, what are the tests it will apply to determine the true greatness of a people? Not population, not territory, not wealth, not military power. Rather will history ask: What examples of lofty character and unselfish devotion to honor and duty has a people given? What has it done to increase the volume of knowledge? What thoughts and what ideals of permanent value and unexhausted fertility has it produced in poetry, music, and the other arts to be an unfailing source of enjoyment to posterity? The small peoples need not fear the application of such tests.—James Bryce.

Palimpsest.

Palimpsest is a parchment on which the original writing has been effaced and something else has been written over it. In early times before paper was invented and when parchment was scarce the monks and others used to wash or rub out the old writing on ancient manuscripts to make room for something of their own. But sometimes the erasure was only partial, and in some instances ancient manuscripts of great literary value thus partially effaced have been deciphered and restored. The word "palimpsest" is from two Greek words meaning to scrape or scratch again.—Philadelphia Press.

Rivals in the Milk Trade.

The milkman had been discarded for a rival vender and was hotly indignant.

"I don't want to say anything against him, but if you prefers milk that's been knocked about on the railway for hours to good milk fresh from my own cows—well, you'll get it. That's all."

"But he assures me that this milk is brought direct from his own farm in the neighborhood."

"Does he? Well, he may be speaking the truth, but it's a funny thing that when I go up to the station for my milk every morning there he is putting milk cans into his cart."—Manchester Guardian.

YOUR BLOOD

is the canal of life but it becomes a sewer if clogged up. All life consists of building up and tearing down and just in the same manner that the blood carries to the various parts of the body the food that the cells need for building up, so it is compelled to carry away the waste material that's torn down. These waste materials are poisonous and destroy us unless the liver and kidneys are stimulated into refreshed and vigorous life.

The Egyptian Lotus.

The lotus figures to a very great extent in ancient Egyptian sculpture, though the flower is often crude and difficult to make out. The fruit of the Egyptian lotus was forbidden as food to disciples of Pythagoras. The lotus was dedicated to the goddess of fecundity, Isis, and buds are said to have been found in the tombs of ancient Egyptian kings. Egyptologists have decided that the lotus of Egypt was the common white water lily of the Nile and not the true sacred nelumbo of the far east.

Washington's Farewell Address.

Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence, I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens, the jealousy of a free people ought to constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collusions of her friendships or enmities.

Wallack on the Ballet.

The late Lester Wallack once told a story of his still more famous father, James W., that as either an actor or a manager he could never tolerate the ballet.

One day there came to him a friend, a man about town, who said, "My dear Wallack, it is very curious that you do not see the beauties of imagination shown by the poses of the ballet." Going on in this strain, the visitor at last wore out the patience of the actor manager, who replied:

"Look here, it is bad enough to stand these absurdities in an opera; but though I can comprehend people singing their joys, I am hanged if I can their dancing their griefs."

Spelling the Word.

A certain small boy's mother was away on a visit. The youngster attempted to write her a letter.

"Papa," he presently inquired, "how do you spell Ike?"

"Ike," answered papa, wisely, "is a proper name, so must be spelled with a capital letter. Otherwise, there is but one way to spell it—I-k-e."

By and by sonny brought father his letter:

"Dear Mother—Ikespect it's almost time for you to come home."—Exchange.

Woman So Weak and Nervous Could Not Stand Her Children Near Her—Vinol Changed Everything for Her

Plant City, Fla.—"I wish I could tell everybody about Vinol. For nine years I was in bad health. I got so I could not sleep, and I could not stand it to have my children come near me. I could not even sew or do any heavy housework. I was simply tired all the time. I tried so many medicines I could not recall them all, but nothing did me any good. One day a friend asked me to try Vinol and said it was the best tonic she ever saw. I did so, and soon got the first good night's sleep I had had for a long time. Now I sleep well, my appetite is good, my nervousness is all gone and I am so strong and well I do all my housework and work in my flower garden without feeling tired or nervous. Vinol has made me a well and happy woman."—Mrs. C. H. MILLER, Plant City, Fla.

RATE INCREASE NECESSARY

FARMERS' UNION OFFICIALS THINK RAILROADS ARE ENTITLED TO MORE REVENUE.

Products of Plow and Farmer Who Lives at Home Should Be Exempt From Increase.

By Peter Radford.
Lecturer National Farmers' Union.

The recent action of the Interstate Commerce Commission in granting an increase in freight rates in the eastern classification of territory; the application of the roads to state and interstate commissions for an increase in rates, and the utterances of President Wilson on the subject bring the farmers of this nation face to face with the problem of an increase in freight rates. It is the policy of the Farmers' Union to meet the issues affecting the welfare of the farmers squarely and we will do so in this instance.

The transportation facilities of the United States are inadequate to effectively meet the demands of commerce and particularly in the South and West additional railway mileage is needed to accommodate the movement of farm products. If in the wisdom of our Railroad Commissions an increase in freight rates is necessary to bring about an improvement in our transportation service, and an extension of our mileage, then an increase should be granted, and the farmer is willing to share such proportion of the increase as justly belongs to him, but we have some suggestions to make [illegible] manner in which this increase shall be levied.

Rates Follow Lines of Least Resistance.

The freight rates of the nation have been built up along lines of least resistance. The merchant, the manufacturer, the miner, the miller, the lumberman and the cattleman have had their traffic bureaus thoroughly organized and in many instances they have pursued the railroad without mercy and with the power of organized tonnage they have hammered the life out of the rates and with unrestrained greed they have eaten the vitals out of our transportation system and, since we have had railroad commissions, these interests, with skill and cunning, are represented at every hearing in which their business is involved.

The farmer is seldom represented at rate hearings, as his organizations have never had the finances to employ counsel to develop his side of the case and, as a result, the products of the plow bear an unequal burden of the freight expense. A glance at the freight tariffs abundantly proves this assertion. Cotton, the leading agricultural product of the South, already bears the highest freight rate of any necessary commodity in commerce, and the rate on agricultural products as a whole is out of proportion with that of the products of the factory and the mine.

We offer no schedule of rates, but hope the commission will be able to give the railroad such an increase in rates as is necessary without levying a further toll upon the products of the plow. The instance seems to present an opportunity to the Railroad Commissions to equalize the rates as between agricultural and other classes of freight without disturbing the rates on staple farm products.

What Is a Fair Rate?

We do not know what constitutes a basis for rate making and have never heard of anyone who did claim to know much about it, but if the prosperity of the farm is a factor to be considered and the railroad commission concludes that an increase in rates is necessary, we would prefer that it come to us through articles of consumption on their journey from the factory to the farm. We would, for example, prefer that the rate on hogs remain as at present and the rate on meat bear the increase, for any farmer can then avoid the burden by raising his own meat, and a farmer who will not try to raise his own meat ought to be penalized. We think the rate on coal and brick can much better bear an increase than the rate on cotton and flour. We would prefer that the rate on plows remain the same, and machinery, pianos and such articles as the poorer farmer cannot hope to possess bear the burden of increase.

The increase in rates should be so arranged that the farmer who lives at home will bear no part of the burden, but let the farmer who boards in other states and countries and who feeds his stock in foreign lands, pay the price of his folly.

THE CHURCH AS A SOCIAL CENTER

A Broader Sphere for Religion—New Field for the Rural Church.

By Peter Radford.
Lecturer National Farmers' Union.

The social duty of the rural church is as much a part of its obligations as its spiritual side. In expressing its social interest, the modern rural church does not hesitate to claim that it is expressing a true religious instinct and the old-time idea that the social instincts should be starved while the spiritual nature was overfed with solid theological food, is fast giving way to a broader interpretation of the fundamentals of true religion. We take our place in the succession of those who have sought to make the world a fit habitation for the children of man when we seek to study and understand the social duty of the rural church. The true christian religion is essentially social—its tenets of faith being love and brotherhood and fellowship. While following after righteousness, the church must challenge and seek to reform that social order in which moral life is expressed. While cherishing ideals of success the rural church which attains the fullest measure of success [illegible] all it can touch, and in no way can the church come in as close contact with its members as through the avenue of social functions.

The country town and the rural community need a social center. The church need offer no apology for its ambition to fill this need in the community, if an understanding of its mission brings this purpose into clear consciousness. The structure of a rural community is exceedingly complex; it contains many social groups, each of which has its own center, but there are many localities which have but one church and although such a church cannot command the interest of all the people, it is relieved from the embarrassment of religiously divided communities.

Social Needs Imperative.

The average country boy and girl have very little opportunity for real enjoyment, and have, as a rule, a vague conception of the meaning of pleasure and recreation. It is to fill this void in the lives of country youth that the rural church has risen to the necessity of providing entertainment, as well as instruction, to its membership among the young. The children and young people of the church should meet when religion is not even mentioned. It has been found safest for them to meet frequently under the direction and care of the church. To send them into the world with no social training exposes them to grave perils and to try to keep them out of the world with no social privileges is sheer folly. There is a social nature to both old and young, but the social requirements of the young are imperative. The church must provide directly or indirectly some modern equivalent for the husking bee, the quilting bee and the singing schools of the old days. In one way or another the social instincts of our young people must have opportunity for expression, which may take the form of clubs, parties, picnics or other forms of amusement. One thing is certain, and that is that the church cannot take away the dance, the card party and the theatre unless it can offer in its place a satisfying substitute in the form of more pleasing recreation.

Universal Instinct for Play.

In providing for enjoyment the church uses one of the greatest methods by which human society has developed. Association is never secure until it is pleasurable; in play the instinctive aversion of one person for another is overcome and the social mood is fostered. Play is the chief educational agency in rural communities and in the play-day of human childhood social sympathy and social habits are evolved. As individuals come together in social gatherings, their viewpoint is broadened, their ideals are lifted and finally they constitute a cultured and refined society.

It is plain, therefore, that the church which aims at a perfected society must use in a refined and exalted way the essential factors in social evolution and must avail itself of the universal instinct for play. If the church surrounds itself with social functions which appeal to the young among its membership, it will fill a large part of the lamentable gap in rural pleasures and will reap the richest reward by promoting a higher and better type of manhood and womanhood.

Self Belief the Key to Success.

Do you still believe in yourself? If so, you cannot become a failure. You can at worst only have failed to learn as yet the science of success, of which self respect is the key. In the great gamble of life we can afford to lose everything but our self respect. Money lost is little lost; friends lost, much lost, but self respect lost, and all is lost. Self belief is the husband of self respect, just as self respect is the mother of self reliance. Believe in yourself and you will win through, for self belief is the mainspring of human activity and the principal source of human improvement. It inspires you to do things; it teaches you to try again. The man who retains his belief in himself will never give up trying, and success is the reward of persistent effort. Self reliance will pull us through many a struggle from which the coward flees in vain and in which the weak succumb. The ability to "get up again" is the reward of the self reliant.—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Rules For Success at Golf.

Writing in the American Magazine, Jerome D. Travers calls Harry Vardon the greatest golf player he ever met and says the bulk of his success might be set down to these few simple rules:

Control of temper.

Refusing to worry over any bad lie or any hard luck.

Playing easily, within himself and never pressing.

Playing always for the hole, even when 200 yards away.

Studying his game and practicing at every opportunity.

Making a point, even in practice, to follow all simple rules, such as keeping one's head still, looking at the ball, etc.

Keeping the body under control until perfect timing is developed.

Using an easy, natural upright swing that stays as long as possible in line with the intended flight of the ball.

Upsetting His Theory.

"The heavy explosions of a battle always cause rain. It rained after Waterloo; it rained after Fontenoy; it rained after Marathon."

"But Marathon was fought with spears and arrows, my dear."

"There you go. Always throwing cold water on anything I have to say."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Same as Being Away.

Neighbor's Little Girl—When did you get back, Mrs. Browne? Did you have a nice time?

Neighbor—Why, I haven't been away, my dear.

"Haven't you, really? I'm sure I heard mother say you and Mr. Browne had been at Loggerheads for a week."—National Monthly.

Many Would Learn Agriculture.

EAST LANSING, MICH. — Because of the crowded conditions in the M. A. C. agricultural department, a large number of students can not be accommodated in certain divisions. On request of Prosecutor Osterhouse, the sheriff was not required to give bonds.

9,000 TURKS ARE FROZEN TO DEATH

Awful Discovery by Russians Pursuing Sultan's Troops.

DEFEAT IS A GREAT ROUT

Rear Guard, in Flight Toward Erzerum, Is Annihilated—Turkish Garrison Is Reported to Have Abandoned Adrianople, Important Moslem City.

PETROGRAD, (Via London.) — Correspondents with the Russian army in the Caucasus send to their newspapers stories of the terrible plight of the retreating Turks after the defeat of the Turkish Eleventh corps in the Kara-Urgan region.

It appears from these stories that large numbers of prisoners were taken through the capture of the victualing transport, which left the regiments concerned no alternative but starvation or surrender.

Thousands Frozen to Death.

Amid the snowstorms which obliterated every feature of the roads, the Russians are reported to have pressed unrelentingly upon their beaten foes. In one stretch of woods the Russians found the bodies of 9,000 Turks who had frozen to death. In their hands they still grasped their rifles.

The correspondents say the condition of the prisoners taken reveals demoralization in the Turkish forces. The soldiers were hungry and their clothing tattered. Many were without uniforms, but all appeared to be equipped with modern weapons.

Large numbers were Arabs and although they were better clothed than the Turks they suffered terribly in the intense cold and snow.

Defeat Is a Great Rout.

The rear guards which attempted to cover the Turkish retreat on Erzerum, according to the correspondents, have been virtually destroyed.

The few disorganized remnants of the army are said to be fleeing in the direction of Erzerum, flinging their artillery and stores over precipices or burying them under the snow.

Turks Quit Adrianople.

LONDON — In a dispatch to Reuter's Telegram company from Athens the statement is made that Adrianople, after Constantinople the most important city in European Turkey, has been abandoned by the Turkish garrison.

The partial withdrawal of the Adrianople garrison has been reported previously. The Athens dispatch gives no explanation of the latest move. Adrianople was a post of great strength to Turkey in the first Balkan war.

WOULD PUT TAX ON CHILDREN

OLIVET, MICH. — "Children of five should be taxed," declared President Lancaster in psychology class at Olivet college. "If the sum were not more than 1 cent the child should be made to pay that much in person to a tax collector."

President Lancaster said that the fault with modern society was that it developed too late the sense in the child that he is a part of the social system. By this taxation, he says, it would be forcibly brought to the child's notice that he is receiving protection from fire, violence, etc., and that he owes something in return.

SAVES FRIEND FROM WATER

Youth Pulls Eight Year Old Playmate From Creek Sled Plunged Into.

BATTLE CREEK, MICH. — John Snide, fourteen year old Ceresco boy, saved the life of little eight year old Craig Fero when the lad was plunged into the icy waters of the Battle creek.

The children were coasting and the sled went into an air hole. Snide pulled Fero to safety but did not attempt to save his own brother, Orn, because he could swim. The three boys are none the worse for their experience.

TRENTON, N. J., FIRE-SWEPT

Many Homes Burned and Damage Amounts to $1,500,000.

TRENTON, N. J. — A million and a half dollars' damage was done in a few hours by a fire which destroyed the insulated wire department of John A. Roebling Sons company.

The flames spread to the residential section in the southern part of the city and destroyed a dozen or more dwellings, from which the occupants previously had removed their household goods. Fire companies from Camden, Princeton and Bordentown responded to the call for assistance.

WAGE ARTILLERY FIGHT FOR YPRES

Kaiser's Troops Make New Attempts to Capture City.

FRESH BRITAINS ARE ARRIVING

Germans Take Offensive as Heavy Fighting Is Continued in Region of La Boisselle—French Take Works Near Metz—Russ Troops in Hungary Advance Westward.

"Heavy artillery fighting has been heard since early Monday around Ypres, where the Germans have taken an active offensive," says the Sluis correspondent of the Telegraaf. "Their efforts to occupy Ypres have thus far been unsuccessful. Many fresh British troops have arrived at this front."

Capture of additional German field works in the forest of Le Petre, southwest of Metz, was announced in the war office statement. This led to the belief in government circles here that further progress by the French forces in that region will cause the complete withdrawal of the Germans from the woods.

A detachment of Russian torpedo boats has entered the bay of Sinope, a Turkish port on the Black sea in Asia Minor, and sent to the bottom a Turkish steamer and three sailing vessels. The crews of all four ships were saved. The name of the steamer appears to have been the Meorgee. No date of this engagement is given. The news is trustworthy.

PARIS — Severe fighting continues for control of Amiens, at St. Paul, near Soissons, and in the forest of La Pretre, where the French are again trying to retake their lost positions at St. Mihiel.

The Germans are taking the offensive, apparently hoping to gain a noticeable success before the celebration of the kaiser's birthday next week.

In the extreme north the weather is still interfering with conditions generally, and Alsace is blocked by snow, which makes anything but artillery duels impossible.

Germans Gather Force.

There is little question that the main German objective will be through Soissons. This is indicated by the gathering of a number of the crack Prussian brigades in the German positions north of the Aisne.

The German artillery continues its efforts to demolish the town, and a large part of it has been wrecked. The authorities have expelled most of the civilian population, and no civilians are permitted entrance at the present time. This is, of course, due to the plans of defense that are being perfected.

Flood Is Subsiding.

The flood in the Aisne shows signs of soon subsiding, and it is believed the general advance will be attempted about the latter part of this week.

German claims that Verdun is encircled are ridiculed by the military experts here. They declare that the Germans have been unable to make any material progress and that not a single shell has yet fallen on the French fortifications in this vicinity.

Russ Advance in Transylvania.

LONDON — A Petrograd dispatch to the Times says:

"The Russian troops in Transylvania are moving rapidly westward. Here the mountain barrier is only a few thousand feet high and the climate is mild.

"The Austro-Hungarians were comparatively unprepared for the important successes of the Russians reported in the direction of Kimpolung and Jokobeny. Russian military circles regard the occupation of Kirlaba Pass as of the highest importance, giving easy access to Hungary."

CALABRIA IS ROCKED BY NEW EARTHQUAKE

ROME — News reached here that a strong earthquake has occurred in Calabria, especially around Cosenza, the capital of the province. It is not yet known whether there has been loss of life or serious damage to property.

Calabria is in the southwestern extremity of Italy, commonly called the "Toe" of the mainland of the kingdom. It is a mountainous region and disastrous earthquakes have been frequent there.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The latest message from Ambassador Page at Rome said:

"Two parties from the embassy have visited the region desolated by the earthquake, covering a radius of some thirty miles. They corroborated the reports of terrible devastation. The government estimates 35,000 as the approximate figure for killed and wounded. Foreign countries are thanked for their sympathy, but owing to the international situation the government is not accepting foreign aid."

NOW THE BIRDS WILL SUFFER

Some Expert Turns Up Who Says They Spread Hog Cholera.

EAST LANSING, MICH. — According to the report of the fight against hog cholera in Branch county by the federal and state authorities, it has been found that birds were responsible for 16.67 per cent of the cases.

About a quarter of the cases could not be traced. The report condemns the use of serum by local veterinarians.

SON OF DEACON HELD AS OPTION VIOLATOR

Cadillac Police Promise to Get More in Liquor Crusade.

CADILLAC, MICH. — Wexford county jail holds more prisoners than ever before, as the result of the wholesale arrest of alleged bootleggers and local option violaters when seven were taken on various charges.

Police say there will be others jailed, including a prominent county and city official. Those arrested are W. J. Allen, Carl Gustafson, Will Simmerson, Dick Austin, William Smith, Gus Johnson, Joe Phillips.

Phillips pleaded guilty to selling liquor while the others pleaded not guilty and demanded examinations which are set for today. Several of the men are prominent and Gustafson is the son of a deacon of the Swedish Lutheran church and one of the city's most respected citizens.

GOD OF LOVE IS BANISHED

ANN ARBOR, MICH. — Daniel J. Cupid, the young man who has a habit of getting his picture taken without over dressing for the occasion, has been barred from the university hospital. Nurses and nurses in training have been forbidden to become engaged while in the employ of the institution. Those who have already "gone and done it" must resign, or break their engagements. Love making, according to the management, musses up efficiency. A nurse who is dreaming of her beloved is likely to stick a thermometer into a patient's eye instead of his mouth and leave the monkey wrench and screw driver where the victim's appendicitis used to be. Such things are frowned upon in the best circles. It is no longer good form to hide the family hardware in an unsuspecting patient.

Hence the edict chasing D. J. Cupid off the lot. There is enough gloom among the internes and nurses here now to furnish a large and commodious morgue.

Gale Clears Straits of Ice.

MACKINAW CITY, MICH. — A fifty mile gale, accompanied by rain, drove the ice out of the straits. The clear water extends from St. Helena island eastward to Lake Huron. Large fields, however, reach from St. Helena westward into Lake Michigan.

WOMEN ADMIT TRAMP PLANS ARE FAILURES

Ann Arborites Find Highbrow Ideas Impracticable.

ANN ARBOR, MICH. — It's up to man—mere man—to rid Ann Arbor of tramps. The women have finished wrestling with the problem of back door hand outs.

Speaking before the civic class of the Unitarian church, Mrs. Marie Beal, visiting nurse for the Federated charities, "passed the buck" to the sterner sex with the ultimatum that the women were through and that the Federated charities had done with its work of helping the tramp.

Mrs. Beal went further. She said the practice of the Federated charities in giving money had not worked out and the scheme of giving pasteboards good for food at the Y. M. C. A. also was a failure.

Mrs. Beal's remarks were followed by a discussion, in which other women bore witness that the tramp evil had depleted their family larders and turned their back porches into "soup kitchens."

MAKING FEES FOR SHERIFF

He Advised Sheltering Tramps at Jail; Lapeer Is Swamped.

LAPEER, MICH. — Since it was made known that the Lapeer county board of supervisors had voted to lodge and feed all "hoboes" upon application at the county jail the incoming freight trains have been loaded with tramps.

The supervisors could not have reckoned on the consequence of their decision, or they would have annexed another cipher to the $50 appropriations. As many hoboes as can be taken care of without building roosts on the walls are being sheltered, and the rest are obliged to rail against the inadequacy of the structure. The supervisors in session unanimously decided that "it pays to advertise."

SUMNER SUED FOR $50,000

Iowa Lawyer Has New Bishop Served on Way Through State.

BOONE, IA. — Bishop Walter T. Sumner was served with papers in a $50,000 libel suit as the Northwestern train on which he was going to his new diocese of Oregon stopped at Boone. John Calvin Murray, the complainant, secretly boarded the train when it left Chicago Sunday night with the intention of "obtaining satisfaction" for a remark the bishop is said to have made a year ago when Murray, who had been divorced, was married at the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul to a Miss Allen of Maquoketa, Ia.

The marriage of the divorced man caused trouble in the church and the then Dean Sumner is said to have remarked that the officiating priest was deceived by Murray, who is an attorney of Maquoketa.

BRITAIN BARS U. S. VESSEL

Puts Ban on Trip of Cotton Ship Dacia to Rotterdam.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The British government will not consent to allow the steamer Dacia, recently transferred from German to American registry, to proceed to Rotterdam under safe conduct with her cargo of cotton, the state department was notified from London.

The British reply to suggestions for a safe conduct recently made by the state department came through the American embassy at London. While the text of the message was withheld, it is known the British objection was based broadly on a reluctance to create a precedent, which, it is felt, would be followed by many similar purchases of German ships in America and efforts to operate them on the former German trade routes.

MRS. FRANCIS SAYRE

She is the Mother of the Third White House Baby.

© 1912, by Marceau.

PRESIDENT A GRANDFATHER

Son Is Born to Mrs. Francis B. Sayre at the White House.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — President Wilson, at the age of fifty-nine, is a grandfather.

The president's first grandchild, a boy, was born to Mrs. Frances Bowes Sayre at the White House at 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon. His arrival was announced two hours later by Secretary Tumulty in this statement:

"Dr. Grayson, the White House physician, states that at 4:30 Mrs. Sayre gave birth to a fine boy. Everything went perfectly and both are doing well."

The newcomer at the White House weighed just six and one-half pounds. Beyond this and the fact that he is a lusty, lively boy, White House officials said there was nothing to add to Dr. Grayson's statement.

POPE DECREES NEW EFFORT FOR PEACE

Two Days for Catholic Special Service and Prayer.

ROME — The most extensive spiritual movement to restore peace to the warring nations that the Catholic church has undertaken since hostilities began is outlined in a decree issued by Pope Benedict XV here.

In the decree the pope sets two days to be devoted by Catholic clergy and laity throughout Christendom to special services and prayers for the restoration of peace. Sunday, Feb. 7, is the day set by Pope Benedict on which the services are to be held in every Catholic church in Europe. Sunday, March 21, will be the day for special services in churches in all parts of the world except in Europe.

The pope's decree exhorts clergymen and their flocks on these dates not only to attend the special services of the day but by prayer, acts of mortification, and self denial invoke God to restore tranquility to a world now suffering expiation for its sins.

The decree orders that the blessed sacrament be exposed in the churches, that special masses be said, the rosary and litanies recited, the services to conclude with Benediction of the blessed sacrament. A special plenary indulgence will be given during the service.

A Story of Venice

By JAMES VOLNEY

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

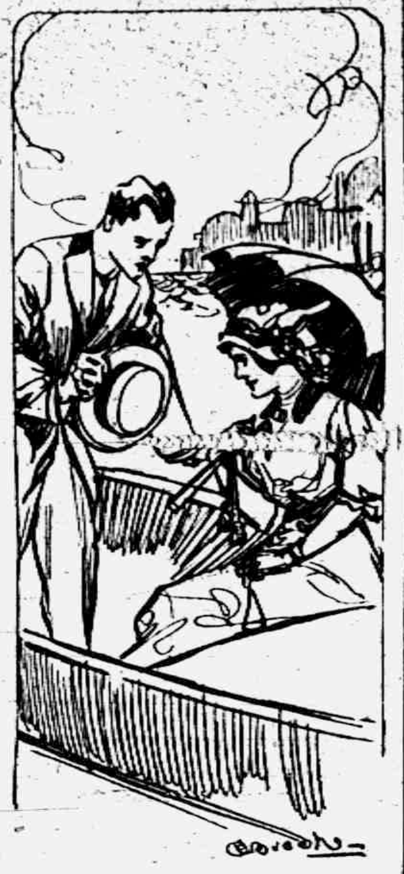
Anne had been bored for two days, and she took no pains to conceal the fact.

Since she had joined them at Milan three days before, after a month in Lucerne, Belle, her newly wed sister, and John, her new brother-in-law, had kept an anxious eye upon her, for the family always dreaded those periods when Anne was bored.

Anne did not like Venice.

On the plea of writing a letter she had remained at the hotel, while Belle and John visited the shops in the piazza, promising to meet them in front of the cathedral in time for a ride at sunset.

She was strolling leisurely across the great square when she noticed a tall young American—you can always tell him abroad—gazing up at the bronze horses.



"I WOULDN'T TELL HIM IF I WERE YOU."

He was alone, and as he turned away he met the glance of the bright looking American girl.

"I wish I knew him," sighed Anne. "He's the first American I've seen here that doesn't look like a professional tourist. And then he could ride with us this afternoon, and I wouldn't have to feel that I'm the third that makes the crowd when I'm with Belle and John."

Here she caught sight of that couple, Belle enthusiastically feeding dozens of the dirty blue pigeons which infest the square, while a half dozen photographers were clamoring to take her picture as thus engaged to send to her friends at home.

"Let's go to Lido," suggested Belle. "It isn't far, and we will be back in time to meet the train."

There was no dissent, and John aided her to step into the gondola. He stretched out his hand toward Anne to perform a like service for her, but she was gazing intently at a tall young man who was strolling by.

"There's some one from New York," she said to Belle and John. She raised her voice and called just as the young man turned. "Mr. Henderson!" She waved her hand toward him. He hesitated a moment and then came toward them.

"So glad to see you here!" exclaimed Anne enthusiastically. "My sister and new brother-in-law," she introduced briefly as she shook hands with him. "It's fine to meet an American one knows. We're just going out for an hour's ride. Won't you join us?"

The young man accepted the invitation and took the cross seat at the rear of the boat, sitting beside Anne, while the others sat farther toward the front. "Mr. Henderson is a friend of Ella's," Anne explained to the others.

"I was so surprised to see you," she said. "I didn't know you were over here, and I haven't heard from Ella but once since I left New York. Did you know me when I called to you?" she asked pleasantly. "I hardly expected you to, because we had met only that once at Ella's."

"Certainly I knew you," he replied readily. "In fact, I thought I recognized you when you passed me back there near the cathedral, but you glanced at me and didn't give any sign of recognition," he added, glancing at her face, which was slightly flushed.

"I was about in the same state," Anne answered. "I thought I knew you, but I wasn't certain. But now you must tell me all about Ella and what they were doing when you left. I sailed in May just a couple of days after I met you. When did you sail?"

"About the middle of June," he replied. "But I'm afraid I can't tell you of what was going on at that time, as I was so busy getting my business in shape I didn't get around with that crowd much."

"But you have certainly heard from Ella lots of time, haven't you?" she inquired.

"Well, to tell the truth, I haven't heard a word from her since I came over here," he said slowly. "Why did you think I would have heard?"

"From what I heard in New York the little time I was with Ella I certainly thought there was to be a wedding in October, and in the one letter I have received from her since then she said nothing about any change of plans. Of course, however, I don't want to pursue a painful subject."

"I assure you the subject is not so painful," he said after quite a pause.

"By the way, did you hear about Mamie and Kate?" he exclaimed suddenly.

"No. What have they done now?" she asked.

"It nearly prostrated Ella, although she was to blame in the case of Kate. You know Kate was always high tempered, and one morning, I don't know exactly what she did, but Ella gave her a beating, and she ran away. Yes, it was shocking," he said in reply to Anne's exclamation of horror. "Ella really thought a lot of Kate, but of course Mamie was her favorite."

"Did Kate come back?" inquired Anne with considerable interest.

Henderson appeared puzzled. "What do you mean?" he asked.

"Never mind Kate, though," said Anne hurriedly. "Tell me about Mamie."

"It was only the next day that Mamie met with a terrible accident," he said. "Ella had ridden out on Long Island with some friends. They stopped at a florist's garden, leaving Mamie at the gate. A trolley car came along, and Mamie, evidently not seeing it, stepped directly in front. She was terribly hurt. There was no doctor near, and no one could do anything for her while she was suffering. Ella saw that the end was only a question of a few hours, and she borrowed a pistol from the florist and shot Mamie through the head, killing her!"

Anne gasped and turned pale.

"I don't believe it," she exclaimed. "It is horrible!"

"It is true," said Henderson positively.

Anne was silent for a time. Finally she turned to him and asked:

"Were you at the Turners' garden party?"

He shook his head.

"I suppose you heard of what Lily did there?"

Henderson looked surprised.

"No?" she queried. "It was rather shocking, but Ella shouldn't have taken Lily with her. There were lots of people there and—er"—Anne turned her head in embarrassment. "Well, Lily jumped in the lake, just for fun, of course, and swam around it several times."

"I had heard nothing of such a proceeding," said her companion coldly. "I hardly think it could have happened. Even Lily wouldn't do such a thing."

They were nearing the piazza by this time.

"If you are going on to the station I had better get out here," he called to John, and the latter gave the necessary directions to the gondoliers after expressing polite regrets that Henderson had to leave them.

Anne turned toward Henderson.

"You know Lily, of course?" she questioned.

He laughed and then said frankly: "I'll confess that I have been puzzled several times this evening, and one of the puzzles is Lily. Who is she?"

"I'll tell you if you tell me who Kate and Mamie are," replied Anne.

"Agreed. Kate and Mamie are Ella's blue ribbon mares. I thought every one knew them."

"Lily is Ella's Pomeranian that always wins the prizes at the bench shows. Her picture's been in the papers dozens of times, and I thought every one knew her. Do you really know any one of the name of Ella?" she asked her companion abruptly, turning and staring him directly in the face.

He was not confused at all as he laughed and replied:

"I can't recall any Ella among my acquaintances just now. Do you know of any?"

"You are to be congratulated on your imagination and nerve," said Anne angrily. "Ella is one of my dearest friends, and I really thought I knew you when I first called to you. When I discovered my mistake we had already started on the ride, and I didn't like to denounce you then."

"Very kind of you," he said dryly. "But the fact remains that I was kidnaped by you."

Anne laughed.

"You were really heaven sent. I would have bored Belle and her husband, and they would have bored me while we were waiting for the train. We are going on to the station now, but I am rather puzzled as to whether I should tell the one we are to meet about this."

It was a sort of question, and Henderson replied:

"To whom would you confide it? Who is it that is coming?"

"The man I am to marry as soon as I reach home," she said gently.

The gondola had stopped. Henderson shook hands with her.

"I wouldn't tell him if I were you," he said, bending over. "I'm going on to the hotel now to join my wife, and I shan't tell her."

"I knew at once she was trying to make game of me," he muttered as he went along. "I wonder if the little impostor is really engaged to be married, and I wonder if she believes I am married."

"I wonder if he is really married and if he believes I am engaged," smiled Anne as the gondola glided toward the railroad station.

A NOTED SPEAKER COMING

The Men's Brotherhood Class of the Presbyterian church has been planning for a large banquet to be held as soon as a suitable speaker could be secured. Sunday the class commissioned the pastor to secure the best he could get anywhere, and on Monday while in Toledo he secured for that occasion Judge James Austin Jr. Police Judge of Toledo for the past eight years. Judge Austin is a man of national reputation reputation, one who has made an exhaustive study of crime, and one who has come to some startling conclusions. He tells a most remarkable story in a most remarkable way. The keenist wit and the most practical philosophy are often found in the characters with which Judge Austin deals. The date of the banquet is Lincoln's birthday, Feb. 12.

WIDOW OF CIVIL WAR VET. IS DENIED CLAIM

Washington, Jan 21.—The United States court of claims has disallowed the claim of Mrs. Frances J. VanTuyle as widow of the late Henry F. Jacobs of Lenawee County. Mrs. VanTuyle's claim was referred to the court when a bill for her relief was introduced in congress. Mr Jacobs was a civil war veteran who served in the 6th United States Volunteer Infantry and received an honorable discharge as first lieutenant in 1866. The claim was set up that he was entitled to three months back pay.

We clip the above from an exchange. Mrs. VanTuyle was a resident of Tecumseh until her marriage and came back with her young daughter after the death of her husband, remaining here most of the time until her second marriage.

Political Sagacity.

As the true sequence of events becomes plain history revises our judgments in regard to political sagacity. We begin to see who were the leaders and who were the blindly led.—Samuel McChord Crothers.

"Yes, we do," said the girl. "I have to wear mother's old hair."—Kansas City Journal.

LOCAL OPTION

Rev. W. B. Hartzog Appointed Campaign Manager at the Anti Saloon Meeting in Adrian Tuesday

At the meeting of the Anti-Saloon League held in Adrian last Tuesday Rev. W. B. Hartzog was appointed Campaign Manager.

An Executive Committee of one member from each town and ward was appointed to assist him in such work as he may designate. He left at once for Lansing for instructions along his line of work.

Much interest is being shown by the "Drys" in the result of his trip as it may be the means of the issuing of a writ of Mandamas ordering the Supervisors to meet and reconsider their action on the local option movement.

THE RUSSIAN COMPANY.

The first of the series of concerts to be given by the C. W. Best Artists at the Presbyterian church was that of the Russian Company Tuesday evening. This company is composed of Marguerite Austin, violinist; Hazel Dell Neff, soprano: and Leo Zelenka-Lerando, harpist.

The concert was a great success and the entire program was received with manifestations of pleasure. It would be difficult to tell which performer pleased the audience most as each number was heartily encored and in most cases a response was given.

As a violinist Miss Austin showed wonderful skill and natural ability. She rendered several difficult numbers with perfect ease.

Miss Neff in her work exhibited a great range of voice, each tone being well given. and her enunciation was perfect. In two of her numbers Miss Neff appeared in the peasant and the court costumes which she brought direct from Russia.

Leo Zelenka-Lerando, the harpist, is an artist of great ability, handling his instrument gracefully. His numbers were much enjoyed as an unusual treat, the harp appearing so seldom in our musical entertainments.

The last number was an ensemble, Miss Neff giving a vocal solo, assisted by Miss Austin on the violin and Lerando on the harp.

The first number of this series of entertainments was greeted by a well filled house, showing that the people of Tecumseh appreciate good music.

It is of local interest that the harpist Lerando has been taking an English course for the last two or three years under Ronald Crane at the Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill., and will graduate in June.

Mid-Winter Wedding

At High Noon Wednesday, Miss Albertine Boyce and Webster Kay Were United in Marriage at the Home of Mrs. B. J. Rector

WILL LIVE IN DETROIT.

A very pretty wedding was that consumated Wednesday January 20, 1915, when Miss Albertine Boyce and Webster Kay both of Detroit were united in marriage at the home of Mrs. B. J. Rector, aunt of the bride.

The house was decorated in green and white. A pergola in the south parlor where the ceremony was performed was beautiful with sprays of [illegible]

Promptly as the clock struck the hour of noon Miss Edyth Rector, a cousin of the bride, played the wedding march and the ribbon bearers Dorothy Webster and Dorothy Randall entered with Madeleine Boyce, the bride's sister as flower girl, who opened the gates of the pergola for the entrance of the bridal party: the bridegroom and best man, Lester J. Heesen, the bridesmaid, Miss Ivie Kalbfleisch, and the bride, on the arm of her father, Albert Boyce.

Rev. Max H. Wallace, pastor of the Brewster Congregational church of Detroit, in a most impressive manner gave the marriage ceremony that made these two one, when he asked, "Who giveth this woman to be the wife of this man?" her father stepped forward and placed her hand in his. The ring service was made most solemn by the words of the preacher. Congratulations followed.

The bride was very dainty and sweet in a gown of white satin entraine, with chiffon and pearl trimmings and her tulle veil was held in place by bands of pearls. She carried a shower bouquet of white sweet peas and lillies of the valley.

The bridesmaid was gowned in white messaline over pink with pink trimmings and carried pink sweet peas The little attendants were charming in their dainty white dresses and pink ribbons and were among the happiest of the company. After congratulations the guests were invited over the way to the home of Mrs. Frank Rector, where a three course dinner was served. They were seated at small tables, lighted by pink candles with pink shades carrying out the pink and white scheme which prevailed throughout the house.

The table for the bridal party was spread in the dining room and was most attractively decorated. An immense basket of large pink roses in the center, with two large silver candelabra on either side with pink candles. The sideboard was banked with pink and white flowers.

The dinner was nicely served by cousins of the bride assisted by the brothers of the groom.

The presents were many and beautiful and two dainty boxes of gold pieces from the fathers of the young couple were especially attractive.

The bride belongs to Tecumseh though most of her life has been spent in Detroit. Her father and mother were residents of Tecumseh from their childhood and were married here some twenty-three years ago, and a number who attended this wedding, were present at that of the father and mother of the bride. Albertine is a graduate of music from St. Mary's college, Monroe.

The bridegroom is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Kay, is a graduate of our high school and Ferris Institute at Big Rapids and until a short time ago has been a resident here

The congratulations and best wishes of their many friends will go with them to their new home in Detroit and all their lives.

Among the guests from out-of-town were: Rev. and Mrs. M. H. Wallace, Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Webster, Mrs. Harry Webster and Dorothy, Mrs. Randall and Dorothy, Mr. and Mrs. John Kalbfleisch, Russell Kalbfleisch, Harold Kay, Mildred Boyce, Mr. and J. W. McClansey, Mr. and Mrs. L. Bibbens of Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Williams of Jackson; Mrs. W. C. Shooks of Toledo; Mrs. Fuller and Gladys of Milan; Mr. and Mrs. Webb Love and Mr. and Mrs. E. L. German of Adrian; Mr. and Mrs. Goldwater of New York; Victor Wakefield of Ann Arbor.

SELF PUNISHMENT.

The greatest possible chastisement that a man may receive who hath outraged another is to have done the outrage, and there is no man who is so rudely punished as he that is subject to the whip of his own repentance.—Seneca.

INDUSTRY.

Industry is in itself, when properly chosen, delightful and profitable to the worker, and when your toil has been a pleasure you have not earned money merely, but money, health, delight and moral profit all in one.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

TRUTH.

Truth is so estimable a quality that is will not permit of any tampering. Like a mirror, to breathe upon it with cold falsehood only makes it reflect a dim image of its purity. An untruthful man is a man always to be feared.

IF WOMEN ONLY KNEW

What a Heap of Happiness it Would Bring to Tecumseh Homes.

What She Wanted

"I want to stop my baby's cough," said a young mother Tuesday, "but I won't give him any harmful drugs." She bought Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. It loosens the cough quickly, stimulates the mucus membranes and helps throw off the choking secretion, eases pain and gives the child normal rest.

For Men and Women

Backache? Feel tired? Not so spry as you used to be? Getting old? Many persons mistake kidney trouble for advancing age. Kidneys out of order make you feel old before your time. Foley Kidney Pills tone up [illegible] kidneys, banish backache, rid your blood of acids and poisons. Sold by all druddists of Tecumseh. adv

Jackson the Saddler.

Andrew Jackson, who was the seventh president of the United States, was first employed in making saddles, and it was from the shop of the saddler that he entered a law office at the age of eighteen. From this profession he entered politics, then into the army, and after defeating 12,000 British veterans at the battle of New Orleans he became our chief executive.

Edison and the Bee.

It is recorded that Thomas A. Edison, after watching the tremendous energy of a busy and noisy little bee, remarked:

"A real plane, a heavier than air machine of great weight, can be built as soon as we obtain something that beats the air at the rate of 300 times a second. That bee weighed 7,000 times more than his wings. If we can only get to that, get to that—the greatest thing for the smallest wing—that is the thing. The bee's wings beat the air 300 times a second."

Money.

Money counts. It is false and immoral to deny that it does. It counts mightily. If a man who desires to care for his dependents, but has not money, is worth his salt he will appreciate that money counts morally and that it was immoral and stupid not to have realized that it counts.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

The Night Hawk.

The night hawk is a voracious feeder and is almost wholly insectivorous. It destroys numbers of malaria mosquitoes and such other well known pests as the Colorado potato beetle, cucumber beetle, chestnut, rice, clover leaf and cotton boll weevils, bill bugs, squash bugs and moths of the cotton worm.

Vain Regrets.

"That man Billin lacks courage and energy."

"Yes. confound him!"

"Why do you say that?"

"Because he was courting my wife long before I met her. If he had had a little more courage and energy— But what's the use of talking about it now?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

All Pure.

Mrs. Bacon—Do you suppose the milk our man brings us is perfectly pure?

Mr. Bacon—Oh, yes! Why, they say he never uses anything but distilled water.—Yonkers Statesman.

Caustic.

"I wish I had your voice!"

"Yes, no doubt you do."

"Yes. If it belonged to me I could stop it when I liked, you see."

Fusileers.

"Fusil" was the old name for the flintlock to distinguish it from the matchlock, and fusileers were those who carried fusils.

Old People Everywhere Say

Peruna is good for Coughs, Colds, Catarrhal Diseases and after effects of the Grip.

MR. W. C. HEMPHILL.

Eighty Years Old.

"I had a great deal of trouble with my bowels and bladder, and pain in my right hip which felt like rheumatism. Weak back. Constipated. Urine highly colored. Many doctors failed. Eighty-four Years Old.

"About fifteen or twenty years ago I was suffering with pains in my back. I could scarcely get about. I got some Peruna and was relieved of the pains ever since.

I have used Peruna occasionally since and recommended it to others.

When I first knew of Peruna the druggists here did not keep it. Now they all keep it.

"I have lived in this place eighty-four years. I am a farmer. Was born where I live. I have three living children. Should you publish this in the papers it will reach many of my old friends. You can use my picture as you think proper." Mr. G. W. Roberts, R. F. D. 1, Box 36, Pickens, Miss.

Eighty-two Years Old.

"I had a severe attack of grip. I suffered terribly while it lasted. After my attack I sent for Peruna. My wife said I must have a doctor, but I insisted upon taking the Peruna, and made a quick and perfect recovery." Mr. J. R. Prince, R. R. 1, Tuckahoe, N. Y.

Eighty-one Years Old.

"I had nervous prostration. One doctor would say I had catarrh of stomach and bowels, another nervousness, and another enlargement of liver. Nothing seemed to do me much good. I commenced taking Peruna, which built me right up." Mrs. Martha Avery, 28 Graham St., Leominster, Mass.

Seventy-eight Years Old.

"I had catarrh of the head. Commenced taking Peruna and gained eleven pounds. It is a great medicine. A fair trial would convince any one of its efficacy." Mr. F. M. Joffrion, Bogalusa, Louisiana.

The Word Magnet.

Magnet is derived from the name of the city of Magnesia, in Asia Minor, where the properties of the lodestone are said to have been discovered. It has, however, been asserted that the name comes from Magnes, the name of a shepherd who discovered magnetic power by being held on Mount Ida, in Greece, by its attraction for the nails in his shoes.

A Difference of Opinion.

"Of course," said the man narrating the time he had been attacked by robbers, "it's not a very pleasant experience to be held up."

The two friends to whom he was talking were silent, but did not seem to agree with him. But one was a girl given to fainting spells more or less genuine, and the other was an unsuccessful inventor of airships.

The King Bird.

About 85 per cent of the food of the kingbird consists of insects, mostly of a harmful nature. It has been accused of eating honey bees to an injurious extent, but there is little ground for the accusation, as an examination of 634 stomachs showed only sixty-one bees in twenty-two stomachs, fifty of these being useless drones.

His Shrewd Idea.

"Who is that sour looking girl with the heavy underjaw?"

"That is the only daughter of old De Milyuns."

"And who is the dainty bit of sweetness with the blue eyes and golden hair?"

"That's the chaperon."

"What's the explanation?"

"Why, it's old De Milyun's clever idea. He thinks his Jane will be perfectly safe as long as Miss Blossom is around."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Last Tuesday morning while one of the Johnson brothers was on his way to the condensery with a load of milk, one of his horses went down on the ice on "the big hill" near S. N. Wisner's. For about an hour the horse refused to move, but had no broken bones when it was at last lead away to a near-by stable.

Terpsichore.

The word terpsichorean is derived from Greek mythology. Terpsichore was the daughter of Jupiter and was the muse that presided over dancing, the art of which she was supposed to have created. She is represented as a youthful maiden, crowned with laurel and holding a musical instrument in her hands.

The Hourglass.

Instead of being obsolete and simply an interesting relic, the hourglass in various forms is a twentieth century necessity. A machinist authority points out that for such purposes as timing hardening and tempering heats in twist drill manufacture, where seconds or minutes must be gauged accurately, nothing serves like the hourglass with the right amount of sand. Accuracy to fractions of a second can be had much more easily than by watching the hands of a watch.

Woman's Weapons.

A number of married men were recently dining together at their club. The question was asked, "What trait in your wife do you consider the most expensive one?" The answers were as numerous as the men in the party. With one it was vanity, another religion or charity or love of dress. The last man to whom the question was put answered oracularly, "Her tears."

Rather Too Light.

The landlady who had not a reputation for overfeeding her boarders asked her solitary boarder as he looked dolefully at his supper, "Shall I light the gas?"

The boarder gazed at the scanty meal and replied, "Well, no. It isn't necessary; the supper is light enough!"—London Telegraph.

Cremation In Norway.

There is in Norway a law dealing with cremation. According to the act, every person over fifteen years of age can be cremated after death if he or she has made a declaration in the presence of two witnesses. For those under fifteen a declaration on the part of the parents is necessary.—London Standard.

Locomotion.

"Her dress," said one of the men, looking at her as she went past, "is so awkward she can hardly walk."

"And yet her complexion," replied the other, "which is much tighter and thicker, is running."—Life.

Our Neighbors.

"We simply must move," said his wife positively. "I can't stand this place any longer."

"All right," replied her husband. "I know a flat we can get that is $5 cheaper than this one."

"Well, I should say not! If we move into that the neighbors would think we couldn't afford to stay where we are."—Detroit Free Press.

A Unique Cross.

In the heart of the Rocky mountains may be seen the Mountain of the Holy Cross, which is 14,000 feet in height. It derives its name from a gigantic cross on one side, near the summit, formed by fissures in the rock. It can be seen for many miles with great distinctness and is looked upon with superstitious fear by the natives.—Exchange.

Ought to Have Leaked Out.

"Isn't it strange that so few men discover the secret of success in life?"

"Yes, but it's stranger still that the secret is still a secret. Surely some of the men who discovered it must have told it to their wives."—Philadelphia Press.

No law in Russia can come into effect without the approval of the duma—an elected body of representatives—and the council of the empire, nominated by the emperor.

COULD NOT SLEEP, COULD NOT EAT

Woman So Weak and Nervous Could Not Stand Her Children Near Her—Vinol Changed Everything for Her

Plant City, Fla.—"I wish I could tell everybody about Vinol. For nine years I was in bad health. I got so I could not sleep, and I could not stand it to have my children come near me. I could not even sew or do any heavy housework. I was simply tired all the time. I tried so many medicines I could not recall them all, but nothing did me any good. One day a friend asked me to try Vinol and said it was the best tonic she ever saw. I did so, and soon got the first good night's sleep I had had for a long time. Now I sleep well, my appetite is good, my nervousness is all gone and I am so strong and well I do all my housework and work in my flower garden without feeling tired or nervous. Vinol has made me a well and happy woman."—Mrs. C. H. MILLER, Plant City, Fla.

We ask every weak, run-down, nervous person in this vicinity to try Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit.

The Divorcees

Disappointed Once, They Hoped For Happiness In a Second Marriage

By EDITH V. ROSS

Two ladies met at a western town where there was a divorce colony.

"Why, Margaret!" exclaimed one of them to the other.

"Why, Gertrude!"

"You've not changed in the least since we parted on commencement day ten years ago."

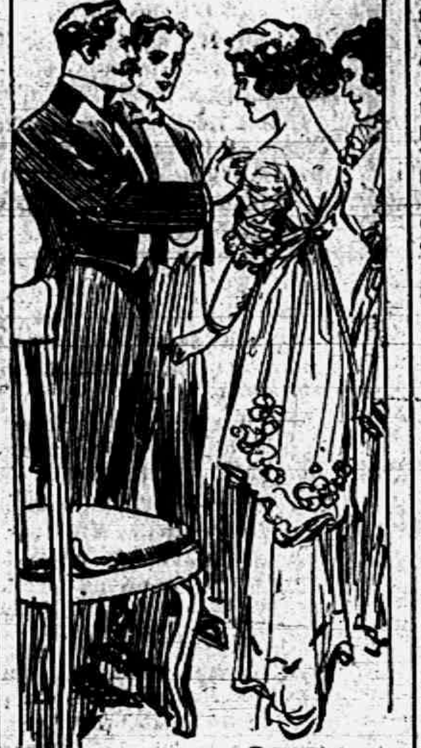
"Nor you."

"But—I am sorry to see you here. I presume you have been unfortunate in marriage, as I have been."

"I have certainly been unfortunate."

Mrs. Gertrude Smith and Mrs. Margaret Jones were at least fortunate in possessing very common names—in this that they were better able to lose themselves in a place where all transient residents were known to be acquiring citizenship that would enable them to get divorces. The two women compared notes as follows:

Mrs. Smith had soon after leaving college met a man who seemed to her to be perfection. He was affable, intelligent and prominent as a man. He had deferred to her in everything until they were married; then he had changed. Where before he had assured her that her will was law with him, no sooner had they returned from the honeymoon than he opposed her in everything. Unreasonable was no word for it. She had studied his comfort in every way she could think of. If there was any dainty food he liked she had taken pains to provide it for the table. If he came home, worn with business she would [illegible] out to a theater.



"I PROPOSE THAT WE MAKE UP AND MARRY AGAIN."

For these attentions she expected some return. Her sister, Mabel, poor girl, had no home, and the wife wished to have her with her. But Mabel irritated the husband, and he had declared that she should not come there again when he was at home. Then there was—

At this point Mrs. Jones broke in. "You have described my husband exactly, only with us it is a case of mother-in-law, and my husband is as unreasonable as yours, though our difficulty is the reverse of yours. He insists on having his mother live with us. True, she has no home and is very lonely, and my husband is her only child living. I will give her credit for being cheerful, and she doesn't interfere with me at all. But I married her son and not her, and I will not be imposed upon by having her with me day in and day out."

Thus did these much abused women pour their troubles into each other's ears, neither of them realizing that she was telling a story as old as the rite of marriage itself. But neither of them confessed the real reason why she had given up trying to get on under the matrimonial yoke. The reasons why that yoke was unpleasant were plentiful, but the one main reason why they had decided to throw it off was not mentioned by either. When Mrs. Smith had asked Mrs. Jones if she thought she would ever marry again after having secured her divorce she had thrown up her hands, exclaiming:

"Heavens, no! Once is enough for me."

And Mrs. Jones declared that if she was ever freed from her present husband she would never take another.

But as time passed a constant companionship brought confidences. Mrs. Smith one day, while cataloguing her husband's different methods of making her miserable, incidentally spoke of a man who was his very opposite in his treatment of women. She had been thrown with him intimately and had always found him ready to give way to her in all those little matters in which a woman expects a man to humor her. Indeed, though this gentleman was middle aged, he was as deferential as one of twenty, and when an older man gave way to a woman it was to be assumed that he would keep up his deference in the married state.

"It is singular," said Mrs. Jones, "how our cases agree. I, too, have met just such a man as you describe—not one of those men whose deference is accompanied by a flourish that reveals its insincerity, but there is something genuine that speaks for itself. You have asked me, dear, if I will marry again in case I get my divorce. I will make one exception among all the men of the world. If the one I speak of should ask me I will not say that I would refuse him."

Upon this confession Mrs. Smith let out a little more that she had not yet revealed. She confessed that her own particular friend had dared to make love to her before her separation and that she had repelled him, whereupon he seemed broken hearted. If her present bonds were severed and she could listen to this other love without shame she was not sure but that she might yield.

Beyond this the confidence did not extend. Perhaps had the ladies been a dozen years younger each might have told the other the name and home of her admirer and as much else about him as she could call up. But at thirty-two one is not so confidential as at twenty. Besides, there was a special reason why neither cared to tell too much. Each of these men, so deferential to the wishes of the woman he admired, had a wife of whom he was trying to get rid, or, if this is stating the case too strongly, his wife was trying to get rid of him.

There was one comfort in this heart matter which pertained to both of these ladies. Neither had any children. There were no innocents to be wrung by parental infelicities. The law being elastic, each was on the way to prove that she had married a bad man and had been made unhappy and she would be able to marry a good man, who would be a blessing to her. What was to become of these two unworthy men neither wife considered.

It is a long road that has no end, and both these ladies at last found themselves free from one matrimonial yoke and delighted at the prospect of taking on another. Mrs. Smith's residence in the west became unnecessary a month earlier than Mrs. Jones', and she departed for the east. By this time the bosom friendship of their younger days had blossomed again, and each had admitted to the other that as soon as the knot was untied she proposed to have a clergyman—if one could be found—to tie another one. Before Mrs. Smith's departure it had been agreed between the two that she should wait for her friend and that they should be married at the same time.

During the next month's separation letters passed between them. Mrs. Smith writing of the subjection of her fiance to her slightest whim and Mrs. Jones chafing under the delay in her own coming to the same happiness. And it is worthy of mention that the two men who were casting off their partners to step into a blessed felicity with these two women were also looking forward to their own weddings.

A few days after Mrs. Jones obtained her decree she arrived in the city of New York and the same evening met her friend Mrs. Smith in a private room at a fashionable restaurant. The ladies met for the purpose of dining together, and each had invited her fiance to be of the party.

The ladies met some time before the dinner hour and had a good, long chat, each congratulating the other on her freedom from a brute and her approaching marriage with a prince of chivalry. The princes arrived simultaneously, were taken up to the dinner room in the same elevator and were ushered into the presence of their fiancees at the same moment, the attendant announcing:

"Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones!"

There was consternation on the face of each and every one of the four. Mrs. Smith's fiance was Mr. Jones, and Mrs. Jones' fiance was Mr. Smith. It seemed for a time that the embarrassment would be unconquerable and that the only way out of the contretemps was for the party to scatter. Mr. Smith, addressing his recent wife, finally said:

"My dear, please explain."

Mrs. Smith pointed to Mrs. Jones for the desired explanation, but Mrs. Jones was unequal to the task. Mr. Jones came to the front.

"My friends," he said, "it is evident that we men have swapped wives and you wives have swapped husbands. Mr. Smith, I have heard what a terrible fellow you are to live with, and I have no doubt you have heard what a terrible fellow I am to live with. My opinion is that none of us are going to better ourselves by the change. Madge, I propose that we make up and get married again."

"I concur," said Mr. Smith, "with the gentleman's statement, and I make you, Gertrude, a similar offer."

The two divorced women looked at each other. A suspicion of a smile came upon Mrs. Jones' lips. Mrs. Smith's lips caught it, and it broadened into a laugh.

"Come, ladies," said Mr. Jones; "let us have dinner. I have been hungry for a new love. I am now hungry for lobster."

"And I," said Mr. Smith, "for terrapin."

The party sat down to dinner and consumed many choice viands, washed down with several bottles of champagne. At the end of it a clergyman was called in, who remarried each woman to her own husband, and each couple departed for its own home, satisfied that all is not gold that glitters and that it is better to bear the ills we have than to fly to others we know not of.

GOOD HABITS.

Good habits bring a personal freedom that it is impossible to obtain otherwise. The man who has the habit of doing anything that he ought to do with clocklike regularity is saved from a galling bondage of uncertainty, hesitation, energy wasting debate with himself, renewed day after day and growing more of a burden as life advances.

To Save the Tablecloth.

Nothing is more provoking to the careful housewife than to have a perfectly clean tablecoth liberally bespattered with gravy the first time it is used. Get a large table napkin—one to match the tablecloth is possible—and a piece of white oilcloth cut an inch shorter and an inch narrower than the napkin. Place the oilcloth where the meat dish will stand and spread the napkin over it. The gravy cannot penetrate through the oilcloth. Thus there is a considerable saving in the washing bill.

Glacial Wonders.

The grandeur of nature's forces may be understood when one of the glaciers of Disco bay, Greenland, is studied. Helland estimated that it had a thickness of 920 feet, with a breadth of 18,400 feet, and was found to be moving at the rate of forty-seven feet per diem. And this Disco bay glacier was only one of the many. Rink estimates that on the west coast of Greenland there are 120,000 square miles of territory, all contributing their supply of icebergs.

ADMIT LAUNDRY GIRL MAY STILL BE ALIVE

Cremation Expert Says Burning in Furnace Is Impossible.

Saginaw, Mich., Jan. 25.—"We admit the possibility that Rose Laundry is still alive," said the head of the Saginaw police force when told of the statement of Henry J. Stahl, Detroit cremation expert, that a body could not be cremated in an ordinary furnace.

"We have nothing but circumstantial evidence in the matter. The child disappeared near the factory. Kimbrough was in the factory when she disappeared, the bones which an expert swore are human bones were found inside furnace, and there you are. You know as much about it as we do, but the circumstances point to the theory that the girl was burned. We have run down every other clue, and this is the only one that seems to have any basis."

The expert for the [illegible] Boiler company which made the boiler, says the boiler in the candy factory is twelve or fifteen years old, but that it would stand 1,500 to 1,800 degrees of heat if valves are working all right, and that that amount of heat could be generated in the furnace, which is without forced draught.

George F. Dice, manager of the candy factory, says there was no great stench about the factory the day after Rose' disappearance, which Mr. Stahl declares there would have been had a human body been thrown into the furnace, and neither the mother nor the grandmother, who visited the factory several times that day, ever mentioned any unusual odor at the time.

Tiring Out the Tiger.

An officer of the Italian army describes the manner in which a pack of wild dogs will attack and hunt down the fiercest tiger in the jungle. Having found their tiger, they proceed not to attack him at once, but to starve him until they have materially reduced his strength. Night and day they form a cordon around the unfortunate beast and allow him no chance of obtaining food or rest. Every time the tiger essays to break the circle this is widened as the pack flies before him, only to be relentlessly narrowed again when the quarry is exhausted. After a certain period of this treatment the tiger falls a comparatively easy prey to his active and persevering enemies.

GERMAN RAID ON ENGLAND BALKED

Admiral Beatty Surprises Squadron and Sinks Cruiser.

$10,000,000 SHIP DAMAGED

Raiding Ships Turn Back and Are Pursued With Loss of One and Damage to Two Others—British Lose No Vessels and Only Few Men Are Injured.

London, Jan. 25.—The admiralty announces that the British patrolling squadron, Vice Admiral Beatty in command, with a destroyer flotilla, sighted four German battle cruisers and several light cruisers in the North sea. The German ships were steaming westward, apparently for the English coast. The British squadron pursued at high speed.

The British battle cruisers Lion, Tiger, Princess Royal, New Zealand and Indomitable engaged the Derzlinger, Seydlitz, Moltke and Bluecher in a running fight. Shortly after 1 p. m. the Bluecher capsized and sank. Two other German cruisers were seriously damaged.

The danger from mines and submarines prevented further pursuit.

No British ship was lost and the British casualties were slight. The Lion, which led the line, had only eleven wounded.

One hundred and twenty survivors from the Bluecher's crew were rescued and it is possible that others were saved.

Bluecher Formidable Cruiser.

The Bluecher was an armored cruiser 493 feet long and eighty foot beam, put in commission 1910. She carried 874 officers and men. Her batteries included twelve 8.2 inch guns and eight 6 inch guns. She was fitted with three submerged torpedo tubes and with a six inch belt of Krupp armor amidships, and a four inch belt at the ends. Nearly all her guns had been reinstalled in 1912.

She was built at Kiel at a cost of about $6,645,000. She made 26½ knots on her test and was considered one of the best fighters of the kaiser's navy.

Beatty's Rise Remarkable.

Sir David Beatty is one of the most remarkable men the British navy has ever known, the rapidity with which he achieved important rank having astonished all England. He is now in his forty-fourth year and has been a rear admiral since 1910, when he was thirty-nine years old, a year younger than Lord Nelson when he attained flag rank.

Beatty married Mrs. Arthur Tree, who was a daughter of Marshal Field of Chicago. The marriage took place in 1901, and since then Beatty has gone to the front very fast.

In 1898, when still a lieutenant, he commanded the naval forces in the Nile campaign under Lord Kitchener. In 1900 he commanded the battleship Darfleur in the boxer rebellion, where he was wounded twice. He was made a captain for his conduct there, at the age of twenty-nine.

In 1913 he was put in command of the first battle cruiser squadron, and in 1914, just before the outbreak of the war, he was knighted by King George.

On Aug. 28 Admiral Beatty was in command of the battle cruiser squadron which engaged the German fleet off Helgoland.

Moltke Visited U. S.

The Moltke will be recalled as the flag ship of the German squadron which visited the United States in 1912 to return the visit paid by the American battle ship squadron to Kiel on the return from its trip around the world. The German vessels arrived at Norfolk in the latter part of May and were received by a big fleet of American war ships. They arrived at New York on June 3.

The German squadron consisted of the $10,000,000 flag ship Moltke and the cruisers Stettin and Bremen. It was in command of Admiral Von Rebeur-Paschwitz. Among the distinguished officers who accompanied him were Lieutenant Prince Christian of Hesse-Philippsthal-Barchfeld, Prince Henry of Reuss, Lieutenant Baron Von Sennchlins-Greney and Midshipman Baron Von Liebstein.

Ten thousand people visited the Moltke the first day she was in the North river in New York and every day during her stay hundreds boarded the ship, which, at that time, was said to be the biggest and fastest fighting vessel in the world with the exception of the British battle cruiser Lion.

There were many social events in honor of the German officers and the sailors were also entertained. The crowds aboard the Moltke became so dense on the day Mayor Gaynor paid his official visit to the admiral that it became necessary to order many to leave the ship before the official city party could board the vessel.

When Coal Fires Were Barred.

Fires were at one time a great luxury in England, and even the right to use the fire had been bequeathed. Thus the will of one Richard Byrchett (1558) read:

"I will yt sayd Nell my wyfe shal have ye chamber she lyes in and lyberte at ye fyer in the house; all yese thyngs shal she have so long as she ys wydow."

Coal was first imported into London at the end of the thirteenth century, but the smoke produced by burning it in improperly constructed grates caused such a prejudice against it that in 1306 a law was passed making it a capital offense to burn coal in the city. The Tower records give details of a man's trial and execution for the offense.—London Graphic.

Mexico City, Jan. 25.—The convention ratified the nomination of Doque Gonzales Garzia as provisional president to hold office until Dec. 3 next, when he will turn the office over to the constitutional president chosen in the election in conformity with the decree calling for the expression of the national will.

This decree ordains that in case of the temporary absence of the president his place will be taken by the minister of foreign affairs elected in conformity with the protocol of the decree until such time as the convention chosen a successor.

The convention reserves to itself the right to depose the president if he violates the plan of Guadalupe or that of Ayala, also if he attempts to act against the sovereignty of the convention or leaves his official residence without the permission of the convention.

A two-thirds vote of the delegates to the convention will be necessary for deposition.

Paris Tells of Heavy Bom[illegible] Germans North of Z[illegible]

Paris, Jan. 25.—The official communique issued at 11 o'clock tonight says: "There was an [illegible] bombardment by the Germans [illegible] region north of Zillebeke and a lively fusillade near the Chateau of [illegible]begg, but no infantry attacks were made. A few shells fell on Arras. There was heavy fire north of that town. In the region of Albert the enemy threw many bombs on La Boiselle, but our artillery forced the enemy to cease firing. There was also a rather lively rifle fire in the direction of Carny. In the Argonne: The fighting in the region of Le Four De Paris has come to an end. We have held all our positions except about fifty metres of trenches demolished by the enemy's big bombs. In Alsace: The battle continues in the region of Uffholz and around Hermanns Weller Kopf, where we have reached the barbed wire entanglement, established by the Germans. No news of the day's operations there has been received."

The day French report tells of progress throughout most of the western front, and claims the retaking of the position of Hartman's Weller, captured by the Germans the same day.

BRYAN ANSWERS GERMAN CRITICS

Defends Government's Attitude in Letter to Senator Stone.

U. S. FAIR TO ALL PEOPLES

Secretary Takes Up Twenty Specific Allegations Made by Germans in the United States—U. S. Stopped by Its Own Policy During Civil War—Last Specification Significant.

Washington, Jan. 25.—The most unusual document yet issued by this government as a result of the war was made public by Secretary of State Bryan.

It is in the form of a 6,000 word letter to Senator Stone of Missouri, chairman of the committee on foreign relations, and is a detailed defense of the administration against charges repeatedly made by Germans and other sympathizers that this government is favoring the allies.

The letter amounts to a statement of this government's policy on practically all issues growing out of the war and involving the United States. The action of the administration at every point of contact [illegible] been construed by German sympathizers as unfriendly to their cause, and the letter is an attempt to answer specifically all the charges made in this connection. All the contraversies regarding shipping questions, purchase of war supplies, control of communications and others are discussed in the documents and statements are made to prove the absolute neutrality and impartiality of this government under the accepted rules of international law.

To Check German Hostility.

In some quarters here Secretary Bryan's letter is regarded as a political document intended not only for the general purpose of informing the public concerning the relation of this government to questions growing out of the war, but more particularly to check the growing hostility of the pro-German and Austrian elements in the country toward the Wilson administration.

The letter made public is in answer to one from Senator Stone, in which the senator voiced the twenty specifications in the general charge against the administration favoring the allies as against Germany.

Won't Even Up Naval Deficiency.

The administration's answer to the last specification of Senator Stone is one of the most important and significant [illegible] ment. [illegible] specification is, "General [illegible] attitude of the government toward Germany and Austria."

To this the state department answers:

"If any American citizen, partisans of Germany and Austria-Hungary, feel that this administration is acting in a way injurious to the cause of those countries this feeling results from the fact that on the high seas the German and Austro-Hungarian naval power is thus far inferior to the British. It is the business of a belligerent operating on the high seas, not the duty of a neutral, to prevent contraband from reaching an enemy.

"Those in this country who sympathize with Germany and Austria-Hungary appear to assume that some obligation rests upon this government in the performance of its neutral duty, to prevent all trade in contraband and thus equalize the difference due to the relative naval strength of the belligerents.

"No such obligation exists.

"The foregoing categorical replies to specific complaints is sufficient answer to the charges of unfriendliness to Germany and Austria-Hungary."

State department officials are confident that the document will go far toward establishing in the eyes of the whole world the absolute neutrality and impartiality of the United States government.

Restrained by Our Own Acts.

One of the interesting features of Bryan's letter is an admission that in relation to controversies with Great Britain the United States is restrained by reason of its own record as a belligerent in the civil war. With regard to contraband and interference with shipping it is admitted the United States in the civil war did many things the doing of which is now complained of in this country.

Rochester, Ind., Jan. 25.—Because of its failure to pay its employes $100,000 in wages during the last four years, the Waring Glove company of this city has asked an extension of time on its contract with the Commercial club, which agreed to give the concern its building on the public square if the amount mentioned was paid in stipulated time.

The factory heads say that they could not get enough labor and as a result have paid out only $76,000 in wages. Heads of the Commercial club are inclined to favor the request.

STAR BOARDER TAKES WIFE OF BENEFACTOR

Man, Money and Woman Leave at Same Time.

Wabash, Ind., Jan. 25.—Daniel Jacobs, proprietor of the Commercial hotel here, is minus his wife, a check for $51 and $50 in money, all because he befriended a stranger two months ago, he declares.

Late in November, George Wise, claiming Ohio as his home, arrived at the hotel and asked that he be allowed to remain at the hostelry until he could obtain work and pay his bill. The proprietor consented to allow the stranded Mr. Wise to stay at his place, and soon found a position for him.

Mr. Jacobs asserts that he can recall that a strong attachment sprang up between his boarder and his wife soon after the former arrived. Nothing was thought of the matter until last week, when Jacobs found his wife, the check, money and star boarder missing. He declares they all departed at the same time.

The husband followed the couple to Marion, where he informed his wife and Wise that forever and a day he was through with them, but that they would be allowed to keep the money. An hour later Wise and Mrs. Jacobs boarded a train for Columbus, O. Jacobs says he will file a divorce suit.

Thinks Act of Serving Warrant on Child Slayer Is Unsentimental.

New York, Jan. 25.—The act of Coroner Flynn of the Bronx in serving a warrant for homicide on Mrs. Ida Walters Rogers in Lebanon hospital accusing her of killing her two babies, aroused the indignation of Abraham Levy, her counsel. He attacked the part played by the coroner as "outrageous, unprecedented and unnecessary torture of the woman."

"This woman," he said, after he had visited her in the hospital in the afternoon, "is in a precarious condition, and if she is subjected to any more unnecessary shocks such as last evening, she is likely to become violently insane."

OHIO PAPER IS FINED $7,500

Toledo News-Bee In Contempt for Comment on Fare Case.

Toledo, O., Jan. 25.—The Toledo News-Bee was fined $7,500 and N. D. Cochran, editor, was fined $200 by Judge Killits, in the United States District court, on charges of contempt, growing out of comments on Judge Killits' conduct of the case, involving the 5 cent all day street car fare ordinance.

"The News-Bee misrepresented the facts in the case that was before the court," Judge Killits said. The court held that the paper was guilty on three counts. The judge said Mr. Cochran was "only the instrument, although willing, of a big corporation."

Saginaw, Mich., Jan. 25.—Leopold Lampale of Merrill has no liking for the Germans, and his dislike is responsible for his presence in the village lockup.

Little Senorita

A Daring Rescue

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Red Flapper came racing across the border to tell the news at Wet Creek ranch. His horse was dripping from the recent bath in the stream, and horse and rider were breathless with haste and fatigue.

"Well, Red, what's happened?" asked Jim Derrick sharply, as he helped Red from the saddle and called to Ching, the Chinese cook, to bring a cup of hot coffee at once.

"It's those greasers over in St. Tomaso. They've flooded the mine and killed Bob Wakeman, the manager. You know Wakeman, eh, Jim?"

Jim nodded grimly.

"And all the miners have cut stick and run. Every American in the outfit has been killed or disappeared, and Wakeman's little gal, the little senorita, they call her, is there in his house with her Mexican servant, Rosa. Any moment those scoundrels may think of the house, and"— Red choked over his coffee and cried like a baby.

"Good Lord, Jim, do you suppose I'd be here now if I could have been any use? I was approaching the mine when I got the news, and the greasers chased me at once. I was hard put to it across the river. Look here!"

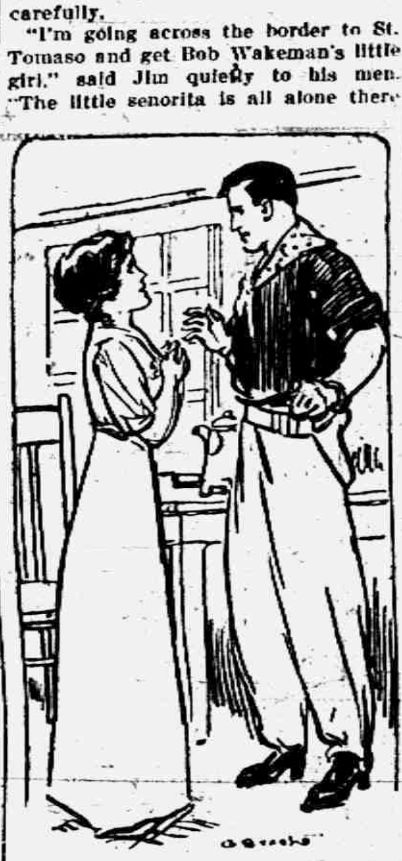
"Forgive me, Red; I didn't know," he said earnestly. Then, calling to one of his men who had some knowledge of surgery, he put the wounded cowboy in his care and sent another to the nearest town for a doctor. This accomplished, he called for his big sorrel horse, Satan, and examined his pistols carefully.

"I'm going across the border to St. Tomaso and get Bob Wakeman's little girl," said Jim quietly to his men. "The little senorita is all alone there with a Mexican nurse. Her father and all the other Americans at the mine have been killed. Any volunteers to go with me?"



"I THOUGHT YOU WERE A LITTLE GIRL."

"Here!" "And here!" "And here!" A dozen hands went up, but Jim Derrick selected six of his sturdiest men, and, having mounted them suitably, the seven disappeared into the gathering twilight of the Texas plain.

It was a good two hours' ride to the bank of the river, and if the bridge was still intact the river could be easily crossed.

The men of the Wet Creek ranch rode in silence, their young leader and employer forging on ahead, with his keen eyes piercing the darkness beyond.

"Bridge!" he called at the end of two hours, and then they went cautiously, relieved to find the narrow, decayed structure still spanning the silent river.

Once on alien territory they pushed the horses to a gallop, and mile after mile was covered until the dark bulk of the mountain where the St. Tomaso mine was situated loomed to the right of them.

It was not necessary to caution the riders to go slowly now, for they brought their horses to a walk and silently approached the mine. Usually there were signs of life about the mine at this hour, lights here and there and the throbbing of machinery.

Now all was silent as the grave below, in which were the murdered bodies of Bob Wakeman and his men.

"Where is the house?" asked Jim Derrick of Lanigan.

"On the other side of that chestnut grove. Better ride carefully through that, boss. Those greasers are keen on ambush, you know."

But their way through the grove was without incident, and this was alarming in the sight of Jim Derrick and Lanigan, who conferred together in low tones as they rode side by side.

"If they harm one hair of her pretty head"— choked Lanigan, as they emerged from the grove into the open space surrounding a small vine covered adobe house set in the midst of a wide dooryard.

They slipped from their horses and tethered them within the shadow of the chestnuts. Then in single file they crept toward the little house where a light gleamed from a curtained window.

Lanigan crept to the window and came back to Derrick.

"They're safe, the little senorita and the servant. Shall we go in?"

"I will go ahead; you stay close behind. If any of the greasers come up, you boys hold 'em out here until we can make a getaway, understand?"

"Sure!" came out of the darkness.

"Now, Lanigan!"

There followed a silence, and then light footsteps across the floor. A voice breathed softly from beyond the door.

"Is it you, father, dear?"

Jim Derrick swallowed a lump in his throat and spoke hoarsely. "Is this Mr. Wakeman's little girl the little senorita?"

"Yes—oh what is the matter?" The girl's voice shook with terror.

"There has been trouble at the mine. Your father has been hurt. I am Jim Derrick of the Wet Creek ranch, across the border. I have come to take you to my place before the scoundrels get here to pillage and burn. It isn't safe for you to remain a moment!"

"And my father?" she asked.

"I will send my men after him," he said gently.

"You say there is danger, actual danger, in my remaining here?"

"It means death," he said grimly.

"Very well, Mr. Derrick. And may I bring Rosa, my maid?"

"Yes. Have you a horse of any kind?"

"Not an animal. Some one stole every one last night."

Jim went back to his men and told them that the little senorita did not know of her father's death, and he told them of the promise he had made to have her father brought to the ranch.

Four of the men volunteered to go and recover the body of the manager, and in a few moments they rode silently away toward the mine.

Presently the light disappeared from the window, the door opened and two dark forms slipped out. One of them, the taller, carried a large bundle, which was strapped on the back of Smith's saddle. Lanigan then took the tall form of Rosa on the saddle before him, while Jim Derrick lifted the small form of the little senorita to his own saddle.

"Rather crowded, but it's better than walking," said Jim grimly, as they went back through the chestnut grove.

The little senorita made no answer. It was evident that she was very weary, for presently her head sank back until it rested against Jim's broad shoulder. The soft tendrils of her hair brushed his cheek, and her very nearness thrilled him.

Coming out of the grove, they avoided the mine and went to the river by another route. They were within a mile of the Rio Grande when there came the beat of hoofs on the ground and the sound of distant shouts.

"[illegible]" muttered Lanigan over his shoulder, and they pushed the horses to renewed speed.

Soon they were flying down the rough road that ended in the bridge, and behind them pounded the hoofs of their pursuers.

Smith was riding on ahead with Rosa's big bundle, and it was Lanigan, riding close behind with the lean Rosa, who discovered that the bundle was leaking white feathers, making a clear trail for the bandits to follow.

Lanigan shouted the news to his companion, and, with an oath, Smith tossed the bundle into the thicket, and Rosa screeched loudly and fought like a cat now that her treachery had been discovered. Lanigan promptly dropped her into a thicket of ferns and rode behind Derrick to cover his retreat with the little senorita.

When Smith also dropped behind Derrick was riding ahead, with the little senorita close in his arms.

Thud, thud, thud, they went, on to the rickety bridge, then out upon the freedom of the Texas plains. The senorita was crying softly, and Derrick felt that it was for her father.

Scattering shots followed them across the bridge, and there came the shrill cries of the Mexicans as at last they gave up the pursuit and went back to their rendezvous.

It was after midnight when the three riders reached Wet Creek ranch and Jim Derrick gave the limp little bundle into his mother's care. Then he and his companions rode back to meet those who were bringing the body of Bob Wakeman. To their delight it was found that the miner was only slightly injured, and his arrival at the Wet Creek ranch was an occasion for rejoicing.

At the breakfast table he stopped in wonderment at the sight of a lovely girl petite in figure with masses of red gold hair and deep violet eyes. She smiled shyly at Jim Derrick and held out her hand.

"I am very grateful to you, Mr. Derrick," she said earnestly. "My father has explained to me just what you did."

"My men and myself," corrected Jim. "But—but I thought you were a little girl!" he blurted out.

The little senorita laughed. "I was once upon a time, but the name has clung to me."

"A beautiful name," said Jim softly. And the girl blushed warmly.

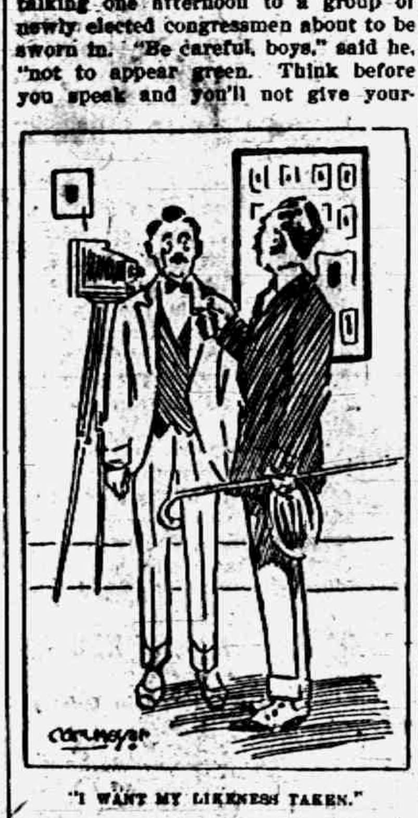
Not Cabinet Size.

An ex-senator in Washington was talking one afternoon to a group of newly elected congressmen about to be sworn in. "Be careful, boys," said he, "not to appear green. Think before you speak and you'll not give yourselves away. I should hate to hear that any of you had acted as a new member once did.



"I WANT MY LIKENESS TAKEN."

"As soon as he reached Washington he went to a photographer's to be pictured for the papers.

"'I want my likeness taken,' said he.

"'Cabinet?' asked the photographer.

"The man, who was new to Washington, reddened and looked pleased. 'No,' he replied, 'just plain, everyday congressman.'"—New York Times.

Placing the Honor.

George Ade is said to have introduced a speaker at a banquet by remarking:

"Two towns in Indiana lay claim to the honor of Mr. Blank's birthplace." (A pause, during which Mr. Blank strove to look modestly deprecating.) "Warsaw states that he was born in Kokomo, and Kokomo insists that the honor belongs to Warsaw."—Everybody's.

Peter Billy's Clothes

They Were Characteristic of the Man

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"I got a hunch that this is my last year as a lone, lorn bachelor man," sang out Peter Billy as he put on a celluloid collar that cruelly sawed his sunburned neck. He picked up a brilliant red and blue striped necktie and tossed the end around the collar.

"I reckon you think that this nigger minstrel getup's going to put you at the head of schoolteacher's class," grumbled Phin Morris from the door step of the bunk house. "Looks like a barber's pole!"

"Nigger minstrel getup, eh? You're plumb jealous, Phin," retorted Peter Billy. "A feller can't put on a biled shirt and a plain, ordinary necktie what they wear in civilized parts but what you kick up a fuss."

Who can blame poor Phin for sitting on the doorstep and indulging in gibes at his more fortunate rival's marvelous garments?

"It's going to be some dance at the schoolhouse next week," volunteered Peter Billy as he stepped past Phin into the starlit night.

"Maybe I'll go," said Phin drearily.

"The Dray girls are coming and a big crowd from Onderdonk. Mazie's going with me!" Peter Billy dashed away into the night, and to the clatter of his pony's hoofs Phin could hear the refrain of Peter's last gay words:

"Mazie's going with me!"

Mazie Fenwick was the school teacher.

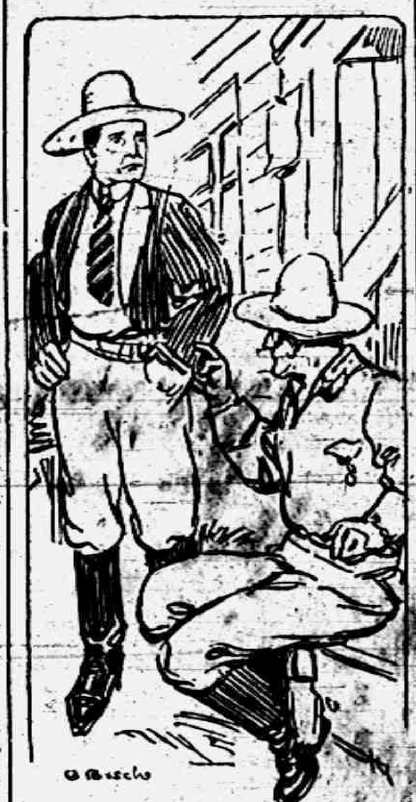
Two hundred miles distant, in a Cheyenne hospital, an old man had suffered a sudden sinking spell. There was no time to send for his only relative, a cowpuncher, in another part of the state, so the nurse, a pale, sweet faced young woman, was listening to the weakening voice of old David Morris.

"Miss Drew, I got plenty of money of my own. It tells all about it in that letter I gave you. But you know I've been accepting charity from my nephew, Phin Morris? Of course you know; I told you all about it, and you wonder why I kept him stripped of his money for the last year.

"Phinny was a wild boy, and I've been afraid that he'd go wrong entirely with that wild bunch at Keeter's ranch. So I just let him think I was hard up, and so he's paid $20 a month out of his $30 on me, and I've sent it to the bank. I let him do it. It showed he's made of good metal. He's got the Morris blood in him, and he'll come out all right.



"LOOKS LIKE A BARBER'S POLE," SAID PHIN MORRIS.

"I'd like to have seen him, but I can't now, and you'll go down there and tell him all this and bring him back with you?"

"I'll go," promised the girl. "You know it's my vacation, anyway."

And later in the day, when there was no more to be done, Nan Drew took the letters and boarded the train that would reach Onderdonk Creek at daylight the following morning. Once there, she went to the hotel and sent word to Keeter's ranch for Phin Morris to come to her.

She was hardly prepared for the strapping young man whose head almost touched the ceiling of the hotel parlor and whose big voice filled every nook and cranny of the room.

And Phin was plainly embarrassed in the presence of the pretty little nurse who had come all the way from Cheyenne to carry out the last wishes of an old man.

Poor Phin was overcome with embarrassment when he discovered that Uncle David had confided all his affairs to Nan Drew, but the girl accomplished her mission so delicately and with such tact that Phin felt almost glad that his uncle had chosen such a sweet messenger.

"You don't look real strong yourself," said Phin, looking down at her delicate face.

"I'm not very well; I'm very tired," said the girl wearily, "but this air is wonderful. I feel better already."

"Can't you come and spend your vacation down here?" asked Phin eagerly. "They take lady boarders over to Dray's ranch. They learn to ride ponies and get brown as berries. You better come down here, and I'll teach you to ride."

"Perhaps I will!" cried Nan. "It sounds very attractive."

"Now I've got to go back to the ranch and tell Keeter I must have a few days off. I reckon I'll get in Cheyenne some time late tonight."

• • • • • • •

It was three months later when Phin Morris, riding down the trail toward Onderdonk Creek, overtook Mazie Fenwick riding her little calico pony.

"Stranger!" reproached Mazie, with a dazzling smile.

Phin could execute a dazzling smile as well, and he proceeded to make himself agreeable to Miss Fenwick.

He knew that for some reason Peter Billy was in the bad graces of the pretty schoolteacher, but Peter Billy was very reticent about the whole matter. As for Phin, he spent many of his evenings studying books, and Mazie had heard of it and dreamed that he was endeavoring to educate himself to her level.

"I'm nearly famished," sighed Mazie as they turned into the main street of the little town.

"Come in and have some ice cream," invited Phin cheerily.

They went, and Mazie's blue eyes gleamed when she saw that Phin Morris' pocketbook was not as empty as it had been in former days. Some one had whispered the story of the bedridden uncle who had left a fortune to the handsome young cowpuncher, and Phin had mounted higher in selfish Mazie's estimation.

Still he wo[illegible] clothes.

"Phin," said Mazie suddenly, dropping her hand on his big brown one in a friendly manner, "why don't you ever come to see me any more?"

"Too busy," smiled Phin uncomfortably. "Besides, Peter Billy's always had the front seat, you know."

"And he's some sore because he fell off," rejoined Phin.

"I'm not to blame for that—really, am I, now?" Mazie turned her cornflower blue eyes upon Phin, and her under lip trembled.

Time had been when that demonstration would have sent ecstatic shivers up and down Phin's spinal column. Now he shuddered uncomfortably, thinking what a blessing it was that he had missed marrying Mazie Fenwick.

"I am not to blame, am I, Phin?" quavered Mazie, with tearful eyes.

"I'm not a good judge. Peter Billy knows more about it than I do," said Phin reluctantly. "You see, Mazie, I was way back in the thirteenth row"—

"You're only joking!" cried Mazie angrily. "I guess it won't be any joke if that white faced nurse over at Dray's goes back to Cheyenne. She's"—

"She's my girl," said Phin slowly, and Mazie flinched at the cold anger in his voice and the hostility in his gray eyes. "I reckon we won't talk about Nan Drew."

Mazie said never a word, but she [illegible] hand and left the store at once. By the time Phin had paid the bill and had reached the sidewalk Mazie had mounted her pony and flown back along the trail toward home.

"Poor, selfish little girl!" muttered Phin uneasily.

On the way home Phin met Peter Billy riding desperately toward the town. He was wearing all his gala attire, and there was a glad look in his black eyes.

He stopped short at the sight of Phin.

"I reckon it won't hurt none if I tell you that she's sent for me!" he cried eagerly. "I guess that there bunch of mine has come true! I won't be no bachelor next year!"

"You mean Mazie?" asked Phin, and when the other held out his hand Phin gripped it hard. How was Peter Billy to know that the prize he dreamed he was getting was merely a poor tinseled package stuffed with sawdust?

So Peter Billy went joyfully on his way, and Phin turned into the trail that led to Dray's farm, where Nan Drew had been spending many happy months.

He met her on the trail. She was riding a cream colored pony and looking bewitching in her brown riding dress, with a wide brimmed hat on her golden brown hair. She had grown plump and rosy, and a golden tan covered her face and hands.

"She's my golden girl," whispered Phin, and then he felt suddenly scared at something he had to confess to Nan Drew.

"Come with me to Little Green canyon; I got something to say to you," said Phin seriously, so they rode there almost in silence.

And when they looked down on the green, cuplike hollow in the hills Phin leaned over and took Nan's little hand.

"Nan Drew," he said solemnly, "I just told somebody that you was my girl! Is it true?"

Nan lifted lovely, long lashed eyes and looked long into his loving gray ones. Then she turned to him with a little tender gesture of surrender and said:

"Of course I am your girl, Phin. I've never been any one else's!"

"Gee, but I'm glad Peter Billy's a swell dresser!" remarked Phin after awhile, and, although Nan tried many a time to discover Phin's reason for making such a remark, Phin never told her. Perhaps poor Peter Billy might have guessed, or Mazie herself.

A JANITORIAL WIZARD.

For Awhile He Puzzled the Tenant Who Thought Himself Smart.

One day Brown lost his temper and determined to discipline the janitor.

"Why is it," he said, "that every time anybody in this building loses anything you ask us if we know what has become of it?"

"Because," the janitor replied, "you are the only folks that never lose anything."

Next morning Brown shouted down the dumbwaiter shaft: "We're short a bottle of milk. Where is it?"

"I don't know, sir," the janitor answered humbly. "I'll see if I can find it."

"Why," said Mrs. Brown, "we got our milk."

"Don't worry," said her husband. "Of course he can't find it, but it will do him good to stew around a little."

About fifteen minutes later Brown was summoned to the dumbwaiter.

"Here's your milk," said the janitor. "I'm sorry I made a mistake."

Brown was bewildered. "Now, where on earth did the fellow get it?" he said.

"He has taken it from one of the neighbors," wailed Mrs. Brown.

Next day Brown complained of the loss of a package of sugar, which, though purely imaginary so far as the Browns were concerned, very soon materialized in the hands of the resourceful janitor. Even Brown got uneasy then; but, being bent on vengeance, he subsequently reported as lost bread, a head of lettuce and a bag of potatoes, all of which were immediately produced by the janitor.

When Brown paid his grocery bill for the month Mrs. Brown, who is a systematic housekeeper, scanned the account.

"Why, they have made a mistake," she said. "They have charged us for milk and sugar and things we never got."

Brown went back to the grocery to inquire.

A Queer Eye.

An orator stated that "the worst enemy any cause can have is a double lie in the shape of half a truth," and the newspaper reported it "a double eye in the shape of half a tooth."

Economy Hints

It is really a blessing not to have much money to spend for window curtains, because expensive lace curtains are not in especial good taste nowadays, while window nets and scrims of all sorts that cost not much more than a dollar a yard are the most acceptable sort of window covering.

It should be borne in mind in hanging one's window curtains that the curtains should be placed very close to the window pane. For this reason they hang on a rod of their own placed very close to the window at the top of the sash. The material should be measured carefully, so that it does not reach below the sill, and at the same time it should not be any shorter than the sash. The obvious purpose of the thin glass curtain is to shield those inside the house from outsiders, to soften the light and possibly to hide any unpleasant outlook. This being the case it is obviously absurd to drape it back with cords or loops. If more light is needed use finer net, and if the maximum of light is needed and there is no reason to shield those inside from sight then don't have any glass curtain at all.

The long side drape curtains serve quite another purpose. Their purpose is to bring the window into harmony with the interior, to conceal the ugly lines of the window frame and to give [illegible]. These side curtains should either extend all the way to the floor or should extend to the bottom of the window sill. They should never be as short as the glass curtain. If they are short there should be some piece of furniture placed below the curtain, as a table, a chair or a fern or other plant.

In the matter of these side drapes there need be no great expense. In a rather formal room they are usually lined. Chintz lined with a harmonizing satin is in exceedingly good taste. For bedrooms unlined chintz may be used to advantage. In certain rooms there is nothing more interesting for the side drape than some colored drapery net, as green fishnet curtain material or one of the interesting brown silk and linen curtain materials.

Nowadays valances are much in favor, and there is almost a necessity for having a band of material of some sort across the top of the window. This may be simply a piece of the side drape about six or eight inches wide run on the curtain pole between the two side pieces or it may be placed on a frame of wood made especially for that purpose which is nailed to the window frame over the side drapery. But there really is nothing too difficult in any of this curtain hanging for any ordinarily ingenious housewife to attempt. Half the battle in being your own interior decorator is in keeping your eyes open. The next time you see a curtain arrangement that suits you study it, and then with the aid of a little patience, a little assistance from the carpenter, scissors, needle and thread, hammer and nails you or any other woman can do wonders in hanging curtains.

INDOOR GARDENING HINT.

How to Have an Indoor Garden In Winter Time.

The culture of plants in plain water is an interesting feature of the indoor garden. This is a much more extensive matter than most persons imagine, and the scope of the garden without soil is quite surprising. Those whose space is very limited may be interested in trying their hands at what can be accomplished without difficulty in this direction.

One of the most refreshing sights to the town dweller in midwinter is the vivid green of grass. Any kind of grass seed will germinate freely when it is kept moist in a warm room, and this habit may be turned to account in the soilless garden. A very pleasing way of growing the grass seed is to obtain an old sponge. This should be thoroughly moist and some means of hanging it up must be adopted. The seed is sprinkled thickly over the surface, and for about two days the sponge is kept in the dark. This hastens the business of germination. Then hang the sponge up in a light, warm room turning it about daily so that all sides obtain an equal amount of illumination. In a few days it will be a mass of greenery which will be an altogether delightful sight on a dull day.

Household Hints.

Holes in kid gloves can be mended by first buttonholing around the hole and then filling in with buttonhole stitch. This should be done with thread matching the glove.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately. The volatile oils dissolve tar so that it can be rubbed off.

When you have need of much whipped cream add the white of an egg and you will require less cream. It cannot be detected.

The Drawing Room.

"We have had a dreadful time with father," exclaimed the socially ambitious young woman.

"I thought he was very kind and indulgent."

"He is. But now and then he gets terribly stubborn. He would insist on saying 'sitting room' instead of 'drawing room.' He said we'd have to show him a reason before he'd change his way of talking any more."

"Did you make him change his mind?"

"Yes. We finally convinced him we were right by reminding him that it was the only room in which the chimney would draw."—Washington Star.

A Stamp Hint.

A stamp without mucilage may be quickly attached to an envelope by rubbing it on the mucilage of the envelope when sealing. Rub the back of the stamp on the ends farthest from the point of the envelope flap, and you will find both envelope and stamp will stick well when the mucilage bottle is not handy.

D. D. D. In Hospitals;
Standard Skin Cure

How many hospital patients, suffering the frightful itch, the raw scorching pain of skin disease, have been soothed to sleep by a soothing fluid washed in by the nurse's hands?

THE SUPERVISING NURSE of one of our prominent Catholic institutions (name of nurse and institute on application), writes regarding a patient. "The disease had eaten her eyebrows away. Her nose and lips had become disfigured. Since the use of D. D. D. her eyebrows are growing, her nose and face have assumed their natural expression."

How many eczema sufferers are paying their doctors for regular treatment and are being treated with this same soothing, healing fluid?

DR. GEO. T. RICHARDSON frankly writes "D. D. D. is superior to anything I have ever found. Soft and soothing, yet a powerful agent."

To do the work, D. D. D. Prescription must be applied according to directions given in the pamphlet around every bottle. Follow these directions—and see!

And it certainly takes away the itch at once—the moment the liquid is applied. The skin is soothed—calmed—so thoroughly refreshed—delightfully cooled.

All druggists of standing have the famous specific as well as the efficient D. D. D. Skin Soap.

But we are so confident of the merits of this prescription that we will refund the purchase price of the first full size bottle if it fails to reach your case. You alone are to judge.

BULLETS ARE TRICKY.

One Chance Shot That Brought Down Three English Officers.

It has been truly said that once you fire a bullet from a modern rifle no one can forecast where it will ultimately come to rest. Even when a bullet has an uninterrupted course it is capable of upsetting all known calculations of its flight and range.

Before the battle of Omdurman a sick officer was carried across the Nile and placed under an awning no less than 5,500 yards from the nearest point of possible fire. This should easily have insured him a margin of safety, but it didn't. A stray bullet ate up the intervening three miles of desert air, struck him in the head and killed him.

Shortly before another battle in the Sudan General Sir Archibald Hunter, Colonel Hacket Thompson, C. B., and another officer were reconnoitering through an opening in the wall of a disused sakieh, or waterwheel. The hole in the wall was so small that the officers had to stand one behind the other to see anything.

The officer, whose name is not given in the incident, was in front using a pair of binoculars, while Sir Archibald Hunter was in the rear. The glint caused by the setting sun shining on the glass of the binoculars attracted the attention of a dervish, who, with others, was retiring along the Nile. He stopped, took rapid aim and fired.

It was a very good chance shot, for it sped through one of the lenses of the binoculars, through the brain of the officer holding them, killing him on the spot, through the shoulder of Colonel Hacket-Thompson and finally lodged in the breast of Sir Archibald Hunter, where it remains to this day.—London Mail.

THE HOUSE OF SORROW.

Those Who Have Dwelt Therein Have Learned a Lasting Lesson.

They that have experienced a great sorrow are born again. The world they are now in is quite different from their old world. In that earlier world they lived upon terms of household familiarity with joy and felicity. Now they must lie down by the side of sorrow and eat with sorrow beside them at the board. Outward things may assert their identity to eye, to ear, to touch, but outward things cannot deceive the spirit within. The house of sorrow is strange, all its furniture is strange, and the newcomer must learn anew how to live.

The first lesson is to accept the past as a beautiful day that is done, as the loveliness of a rose that has withered away. The object of our yearning has passed from the world of actual contacts into the world of art. Memory may paint the picture as it will, drop out all shadows and catch the beauty of our exquisite loss in all the golden glow of human happiness.

There, within the shrine prepared by sorrow, that picture will ever refresh us and bless us. Evil cannot touch it, nor ill will, nor envy, nor sordid care. Only our own faithfulness, our own acceptance of unworthy things, can stain the freshness of its beauty. Sorrow has constituted us the sacristans of this shrine; on us rests the care of this pictured relic, and unless we suffer motes and beams to get in our eyes it will remain as bright in the sanctuary of memory as in the sunshine of earthly life.—Atlantic.

His Passport.

On one occasion Gustave Dore, the artist, lost his passport while on a tour in Switzerland. At Lucerne he asked to be allowed to speak to the mayor, to whom he gave his name.

"You say that you are M. Gustave Dore, and I believe you," said the mayor, "but," and he produced a piece of paper and a pencil, "you can easily prove it."

Dore looked around him and saw some peasants selling potatoes in the street. With a few clever touches he reproduced the homely scene and, appending his name to the sketch, presented it to the mayor.

"Your passport is all right," remarked the official, "but you must allow me to keep it and to offer you in return one of the ordinary form."

The Codex Sinaiticus.

The most ancient of the New Testament manuscripts is the one known as the "Codex Sinaiticus," published at the expense of Alexander II. of Russia since the Crimean war. This codex covers nearly the whole of the Old and New Testaments and was discovered in the Convent of St. Catherine on Mount Sinai by the celebrated Tischendorf. It is generally ascribed to the fourth century.—New York American.

Doughnuts
That will remain moist.

Every housewife who bakes her own bread knows that if a little potato is added to the sponge, the bread will not dry out as quickly. In this recipe potato is utilized to make doughnuts that will remain moist and fresh for several days.

K C will be found to have distinct advantages over any other Baking Powder for doughnuts. K C is a double acting baking powder with which a large batch of doughnuts may be mixed and fried a few at a time. The last will be as light and nice as the first.

K C Potato Doughnuts

By Mrs. Nevada Briggs, of Baking School fame.

3½ cups flour; 2 eggs; 1 cup sugar; 2 level teaspoonfuls K C Baking Powder; ½ teaspoonful salt; ¼ teaspoonful mace; 1 cup cold mashed potato; ½ cup milk, or more if needed.

Sift three times, the flour, salt, spice and baking Powder. Beat eggs with rotary beater, then still using rotary beater, gradually add sugar, then work in the mashed potato with a spoon and alternately add milk and flour mixture. Make a soft dough, roll into a sheet, cut into rounds, pinch a hole in the center with the finger and fry in deep fat.

Fat for frying should not be hot enough to brown the doughnut until it has risen. When the doughnut is dropped into the fat it sinks to the bottom. As soon as it comes up it should be turned and turned a number of times while cooking. This recipe is excellent as they do not take the fat in frying and will stay moist for days.

SELL AMERICA FIRST

by Edgar A. Guest

Have you tried to sell your neighbor
All the products of your labor,
Do the people 'round about you buy your shoes?
Of the goods that you are making
Are you certain they are taking
All that they will ever want or ever use?
You go reaching out for orders,
Unto far-off foreign borders
Your clever, busy salesmen yearly roam:
Now the war that's on off yonder
Gives you double cause to ponder,
Are you doing all you could do here at home?

CHORUS

Have you tried, far and wide?
'Neath the Stars and Stripes success for you awaits.
Sell at home, 'fore you roam,
You can prosper in the old United States.

Are you every minute filling
Seeking franc and mark and shilling,
While the dollar's lying idle at your gates?
Are you sure your tale's been told to,
And your products have been sold to,
Every customer in these United States?
Now in Europe bombshells hurtle
Over fields that once were fertile,
And there isn't any business 'cross
the foam;
Don't you think if you would hustle,
Would display some grit and muscle,
You could do more than you're doing here at home?

Here's a nation big and splendid,
By the arts of peace defended,
Here's the haven of the merchant-
men of trade;
Here's the home of honest labor;
Why not cultivate your neighbor?
Why not sell to him the products you have made?
Why pass up the fertile home town
For the far-across-the-foam town?
Why for business must you tap at foreign gates?
There is much more that you could do,
There is much more that you would
do,
If you'd give your time to these United States.

GOUGH'S LAST WORD

There is a special fitness in regarding the story of Samson as a temperance lesson. The advice given to the mother of Samson before his birth is in harmony with the very latest science, because it has been found that children of mothers who drink liquor, even in moderation, have a strong tendency to become victims of alcoholism. Samson was pledged from his birth to be a total abstainer; and the enemies he overthrew, both beast and man, and that finally overthrew him, are very like the enemy which comes to tempt us in the guise of drink It was the roar of a lion, then the attacks of men and lastly the pleadings of a woman that sought to conquer the Lord's giant. So, like a lion and like strong men and even like a delicate woman, the evil of strong drink may attack and lure us. There is only one safe standard, that which Gough uttered just as death stilled his clarion voice: "Young man, keep your record clean."—The Christian Herald.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

Semester Examinations last week. Mathematics on Monday, English on Tuesday, History on Wednesday, Languages on Thursday and Sciences on Friday and Monday.

Miss Harris has been reading a play "The Scarecrow" taken from Hawthorne's "Feathertop," to the English III class during the past week. This class has completed the study of Halleck's "American Literature," and is about to begin Shakespeare's "Julius Cæsar." On Monday they are to have special reports on Shakespeare, Stratford, and the life of Julius Cæsar.

During examination week the Algebra II classes studied Graphing. Beginning Monday they will study Plane and Solid Geometry.

The English II classes are making a comprehensive study of the art of letter writing. They have completed their study of George Eliot's "Silas Marner."

The Drawing class is doing some beautiful work this year. They have made and bound their own books for notes on drawing, notes on design, and color notes. They are now working on a book of famous picture studies, among which they have already studied, "Automedon, with the Horses of Achilles," and "Sir Galahad."

Irving's "Sketch Book" has been completed by the English I class and they are about to begin the study of Scott's "Ivanhoe."

The Latin IV class has completed "Liber Primus" and "Liber Secundus" of Virgil's "Aeneid" and have started "Liber Tertius."

Some shelves have been built in the southeast corner of the assembly room for the books of the reference library.

About thirty of the High School students from the Junior and Senior classes accompanied by the faculty dropped in on Russell McNeil Saturday night to remind him that it was his birthday.

THE CAT AND THE FIDDLE

Chas. A. Sellon's musical extravaganza, "The Cat and the Fiddle," appeared at Bradley's opera house last Friday night. The attendance was not large owing perhaps to the stormy weather, but those who braved the storm seemed to be much pleased and were kept in good humor by the efforts of Happy and Hans.

Chas. A. Sellon, himself, took the part of Happy, "a child of fortune," and certainly had things coming his own way. He was supported by a strong cast with plenty of good music and catchy songs. The scenic effects carried by this company were unusually good, 15 scenes being shown in all combined with some clever trick scenic effects.

Willett's orchestra from Adrian furnished the music.

WIT AND WISDOM

The Wit and Wisdom club met Monday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Waring, who were assisted by Miss Mary Dingman and Henry Conkling in entertaining.

After the business meeting the program of the evening was taken up with Mrs. Albert Waring as leader. An interesting paper was read by A. O. Howard, topic, "The Supreme Court of the United States," followed by Miss Nannie Kyle with a paper on "The Personnel of the Supreme Court" which was also very interesting.

Roll Call, "Statesmen of Prominence" was responded to. Mrs. Chas. Kemp presented Miss Charity Higgins vocal organ which furnished no end of amusement. The organ was composed of a sheet spread across the room with openings representing notes with various members of the club as human notes, and as she touched the notes the response was given. Several pieces were played. This organ was supposed to be the invention of Miss Charity Higgins represented by Mrs. Kemp

While the inventor had spent much time and thought in prefecting it, yet it was found to be faulty The notes were not all true and when the audience demanded a response the organ could not be made to produce the music. We heard Mr. C. A. Slayton state that he would be glad to purchase one of those organs but could not determine which attracted him most the fair notes of the organ or melody it produced. A guessing contest and refreshments completed the evenings entertainment.

The first assembly following Miss Ruby Walton's dancing school was held last evening with a good crowd in attendance. A pleasant time was enjoyed by all, Mr. and Mrs. W. L. supplied the music.

Scheme For Card Party.

At a card party of six tables the hostess assigned the table by colors in this way: She had her little daughter distribute four flowers of a kind, and each table had a vase of flowers in the center of the kind given to the guests.

For instance, four guests received red roses, and they went to the table having the vase of red roses in the center. The four pink roses found their places, the four yellow and the four pink tulips and the four yellow, etc.

Scores were kept, as usual, on flower decorated cards, and at the end of the game the vases and flowers were awarded as prizes. They were removed from the table during the game. One would suggest baskets instead of vases, as they are somewhat newer and much in favor as prizes, or some of the very attractive flower holders might be used. Guests are always pleased with them, and no one minds having more than one.

On St. Valentine's Day.

St. Valentine's day is always a day for much entertaining. A suitable centerpiece would be a plaster cast of the goddess of marriage. Arrange a wreath of orange blossoms or bride roses at the base of the statue and around her neck place garlands of small pink flowers, to be distributed later among the guests. Instead of place cards use a small gilded bow and arrow at each place, writing the name of the guest on the arrow and a quotation appropriate to that guest on the bow. Serve as many things in "heart shapes" as possible.

The Engagement Ring.

It is no longer chic to wear an engagement ring next to the wedding ring. The plain gold band (already platinum is passe) must be alone in its glory, while the engagement ring is worn on the little finger of the left hand. It should be a diamond, surrounded by colored stones, set quite low and flat. Of course no other rings must ever be worn on that hand.

Fish and Salad.

It is incorrect to use the knife for either fish or salad. The flesh of the fish is so tender that it may be cut with a silver fork without any trouble. If the salad is not broken into pieces of convenient size you should cut it with the side of the fork or fold each piece over into suitable size for eating.

Birth Announcements.

When one receives the card announcement of the birth of a child to a friend one should write a note of congratulation to the mother, and, if so inclined, one should send a gift to the baby. A dainty dress, an embroidered flannel skirt, a cap or appropriate jewelry would be suitable gifts.

A TECUMSEH CITIZEN COMES TO THE FRONT

Tells His Friends And Neighbors Of His Experience

Every Tecumseh resident should read what a neighbor says. His testimony can be relied upon. Here are his own words.

W. C. Witherell, W. Potawatamie St., Tecumseh, says: "I had acute pains across the small of my back and in my hips. Often, after stooping a sharp twinge darted through my loins obliging me to lie down. I was laid in bed for several days and I believe that the trouble was caused by excessive stooping. When I learned of Doan's Kidney Pills, I got a supply at Wright & Son's Drug Store and a few boxes restored me to good health. Since then, whenever I have felt in need of a kidney medicine, I have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and the results have been very pleasing. I have had no reason to change my high opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills, which I expressed some years ago."

What She Wanted

"I want to stop my baby's cough," said a young mother Tuesday, "but I won't give him any harmful drugs." She bought Foley's Honey and Tar Compound. It loosens the cough quickly, stimulates the mucus membranes and helps throw off the choking secretion, eases pain and gives the child normal rest.

For Men and Women

Backache? [illegible] tired? Not so spry as you used to be? Getting old? Many persons mistake kidney trouble for advancing age. Kidneys out of order make you feel old before your time. Foley Kidney Pills tone up and invigorate the kidneys, banish backache, rid your blood of acids and poisons. Sold by all druddists of Tecumseh. adv

Cookery Notes

Lenten Meat Substitutes.

With the approach of Lent, when the supply of meat will be cut down, housewives are interested in knowing how to substitute for it foods that will supply equal nourishment.

Meat is not a necessity, though it has many points in its favor—that is, it is palatable, capable of much variety in cooking and is fairly easy of digestion, with the exception of veal and pork.

Foods best adapted to take the place of meat are eggs, milk and cheese, and, for those who are leading an active life, pulse foods, such as peas, beans and lentils. These nitrogenous vegetables have excellent meat value, but are not easily digested in large quantities by those leading sedentary lives.

Remember that cheese is a highly concentrated food, so should be mixed with starchy foods, such as macaroni, bread and rice. Nuts are highly nutritious and capable of being converted into many attractive dishes. Pine kernels, almonds, walnuts and hazelnuts are good meat substitutes, while Brazil nuts and cocoanuts are oleaginous. Chestnuts alone contain any starch.

Too much meat is not healthy unless one is expending a great deal of energy. Vegetables make a satisfactory and wholesome diet, especially when they are supplemented by fruits.

With the exception of beans, peas and lentils, which contain a large amount of proteids, vegetables are valuable for their potash, and salts are a valuable part of diet. They contain cellulose, which gives the needed bulk to food. Winter vegetables should be kept in a dry place.

Dinner Combinations.

Any vegetable harmonizes with beef.

Serve caper sauce only with mutton.

With fricasseed meats serve baked potatoes.

Serve tomatoes in some form with veal.

Serve potatoes plain boiled only when new.

With roast chicken serve mashed potatoes, onions and tart jelly.

With roast meats serve potatoes mashed or roasted in the pan with the meat.

With roast lamb serve mashed potatoes, green peas or string beans and a mint sauce.

With roast beef serve potatoes baked in the pan and a sweet watermelon or peach pickle.

For a family dinner serve a clear soup, meat, potatoes or a starchy vegetable like rice or hominy, a green vegetable and dessert, or meat, potatoes or a substitute, a salad and dessert, or a cream soup, a made dish of meat and potatoes and dessert.

Egg Canapes For Lent.

Take four eggs, three mushrooms, two anchovies, six capers, one teaspoonful of tarragon vinegar, one teaspoonful of butter and eight small rounds of fried bread. Boil the eggs quite hard. Take off the shells and cut them in halves across. Take out the yolks and chop them up. Chop also the capers and mushrooms; soak the anchovies, dry them and remove the bones; chop the anchovies. Mix well together with enough salt and pepper to season and add the tarragon vinegar. With this stuff the whites of the eggs, neatly piling the mixture to a point. Put a small piece of butter on the top of each. Have the eight small, neatly cut rounds of bread fried; make the eggs stand, one on each, put them into the oven to get quite hot and serve at once.

Grasping Animal.

Man is never satisfied. If he finds a nickel which he didn't know he had in some obscure pocket he immediately begins to look for another. — Toledo Blade.

Economy Hints

Very few families of the present day, even at the simple home dinner, have the roasts and meats brought on the table to be carved. It is so much simpler for every one concerned to have the maid carve it in the kitchen and pass it to each diner.

This simpler way, then, makes it possible to have a much smaller table and also does away with the necessity of placing any carving implements and serving forks or spoons on the table during the process of setting it. The arrangement of the silver at each place has gradually changed during the past five years, and, while many of the best families adhere to the old way, still the new method is becoming almost universal.

The knives and spoons are always placed together at the right of the plate and the forks at the left. Formerly these were arranged according to the order in which they were used, beginning at the outside, with the knife or fork for the first course, and working in to the plate. But this makes such an ugly arrangement that it is only retained by a few families.

Far prettier is the present day arrangement, which is made for its appearance rather than for convenience. Nowadays in setting the silver we place the soup spoon next to the plate, the largest knife right next to that, then the next sized knife beyond that down to the smallest knife and spoon to be used. The coffee spoon is not put on the table, but is brought into the drawing room with the coffee service later.

A plate is always put at each place on the table between the silver, being removed when the soup is brought in. The glasses are above the knives, and if there are to be wines or liquors the glasses for these drinks are arranged in order after the water tumbler. To the left, above the fork, the butter dish or bread and butter plate is placed. Directly above each plate, in between the glasses and the butter plate, should be put individual salt and pepper shakers. Each person should have the use of a separate salt and pepper box.

Flowers make the centerpiece, and the four or two candlesticks are on either side of the center. Olives, celery, radishes, pickles, bonbons or nuts are placed on the table from the start. No bread or butter is put on the table, but is passed by the maid.

Hopeless.

"He ought to turn over a new leaf."

"Gee, that wouldn't do much good; He could turn over a whole library and not have a good start toward being decent."—Exchange.

He Was "It."

When my wife and I were on our honeymoon we were advised to visit certain ruined castle, the custodian of which was a relative of the noble owner. Having viewed the glorious old pile, I was at a loss how and in what way to offer a gratuity, bearing in mind the "blue blood" of our guide. The following conversation took place: "We thank you for your courtesy and would be glad to give a small sum to any cause if you have a box for that purpose." "Sir," was the reply, "we have such a box." "Then may I see it?" I asked. "Sir," with a pleasant smile and a bow, "I am the box."—Strand Magazine.

In Hot Water.

"Typographical errors," said a writer, "are continually cropping up. I called for a magazine editor the other day to take him out to luncheon. As he was getting gratefully into his coat a man entered.

"'Do you read your magazine?' the man asked.

"'I do,' replied the editor.

"'Have you read the new number, the one that came out yesterday?'

"'I have.'

"'Have you read my poem, "To Gabrielle," on page 117?'

"'N-no.'

"'No! Well, in that poem I wrote the line, "I love you better than I love my life."'

"'A neat line—neat and well turned,' said the editor soothingly.

"'And one of the professional humorists of your composing room set it up to read, "I love you better than I love my wife."'

"'How—er'—

"'Than my wife—precisely that. And my wife knows nothing of composing room comedy, and she thinks the line was printed exactly as I wrote it.'"

Witty Foreman.

The foreman of a jury which sat in a New England courtroom possessed a ready wit that served him well in an encounter with a judge of brilliant attainments.

The judge, although a man of abrupt speech and manner, possessed a quick sense of humor. The foreman was late one day, only a few minutes late, but even that was sufficient to irritate his honor, as he afterward owned.

"I overslept, your honor," said the foreman, with due meekness, as he took his seat.

"Fine him," said the judge testily.

"May it please your honor," said the foreman quickly, "I did not dream of that."

"Remit the fine," said the judge, hiding his mouth with his hand for a moment, but his eyes betrayed him for all that.—Case and Comment.

HOW TO CURE A CHRONIC COUGH

Jackson, Miss.—"I am a carpenter, and the grippe left me not only with a chronic cough, but I was run-down, worn out and weak. I took all kinds of cough syrups but they did me no good. I finally got so weak I was not able to do a day's work, and coughed so much I was alarmed about my condition. One evening I read about Vinol and decided to try it. Before I had taken a quarter of a bottle I felt better, and after taking two bottles my cough is entirely cured, all the bad symptoms have disappeared and I have gained new vim and energy." —JOHN L. DENNIS, 711 Lynch Street, Jackson, Miss.

The reason Vinol is so successful in such cases is because the active medicinal principles of cod liver oil contained in Vinol rebuilds wasting tissues and supplies strength and vigor to the nerves and muscles while the tonic iron and wine assist the red corpuscles of the blood to absorb oxygen and distribute it through the system, thus restoring health and strength to the weakened, diseased organs of the body.

The Archaeologist

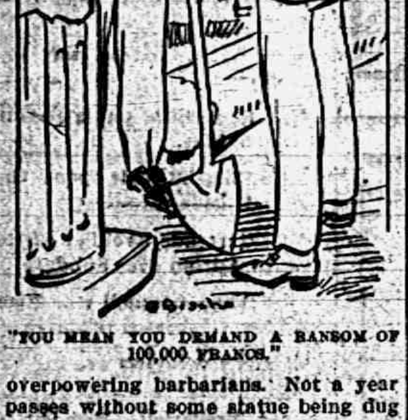
How a Bandit Received a Pardon and Employment

By F. A. MITCHEL

I do not hesitate to say that to many educated persons Rome is the most interesting city in the world. She scattered over Europe the seeds of our religion. She formulated our laws. Hardy in her prime, she mingled her blood with barbarians who, when she became old and feeble, inherited her early hardihood of brain and body and begat the European of today.

From my childhood I wished to visit Rome. As boys study with a view to an object, such as a profession or a business, I studied with a view to visiting the Eternal City. I learned to speak Italian and Latin. I read the books of Roman writers that have been preserved to us for twenty centuries in the language in which they were written.

What gave direction to my desires was reading of the hasty burial of works of art to hide them from the overpowering barbarians. Not a year passes without some statue being dug from beneath the surface in or about Rome. I was myself seized with a desire to find some of the treasures that adorned Rome in the days of her grandeur. My object in life may not have been practical, but it is not only practical objects that are absorbing.



"YOU MEAN YOU DEMAND A RANSOM OF 100,000 FRANCS."

I was not permitted to visit the land of my dreams until I was twenty-seven years old. Then I found myself in possession of property which gave me an income of a few thousands a year. Within a month after the receipt of my patrimony I was in Rome.

I had been more than a year in Rome and had studied the references to a number of villas that had been the residences of ancient Romans with a view to selecting one to search for. Finally I stumbled on a record of a very rich man, Manlius Quintus Piso, who had made his money as an auctioneer. Mention was made of a mania coming upon him after he acquired wealth for collecting beautiful works of art. The author I read stated that his villa contained more valuable statues than any other of his time. Among others was mentioned a statue of Diana that had cost its owner a fabulous sum. The location of the villa was given as among the hills lying to the south of Rome across the Campagna. A small stream flowed past it; a high hill was directly behind it. There were other references to the contour of the surrounding country calculated to help one searching for the site. These I studied and, not content with one reference, hunted till I found another description of the villa as it had been before its destruction during one of the earlier invasions of the Goths.

When I had got all the information possible on the subject I packed digging implements in my trunk—I did not dare to let it be known that I was going to make excavations—and went by the electric railway to Frascati, which I made my headquarters. I set out from there the next morning with my implements rolled in a steamer rug bound by a shawl strap.

I spent a week hunting for a location that fitted the description I had gained from the books I had read. Then I spent another week doing some surface excavating. I was digging, the third week, on a spot which I thought warranted more attention than the others when something happened.

"Signor!"

The voice came from behind me. I turned quickly and saw a man standing with a rifle in his hands, which he could bring to his shoulder in a moment. I had been aware of the danger attending being out alone in the country in Italy and had a revolver strung to each hip. But before I could use either of them I would be killed. The man covering me was so respectable looking that I could not realize at once that he was a bandit. But he would have had no object in being ready to shoot me if he were not.

"I presume," he said in excellent Italian, "that you are doing archaeological work. Are you aware that excavations are in the hands of the government?"

"I am," I replied, "but I am hoping to make a discovery that will surprise the government and thus gain immunity from having broken the law."

"I sympathize with you, signor, but as a good citizen it is my duty to inform upon you."

"What sum would induce you to refrain?"

"You are an American, I fancy, from your looks, your dress and the accent with which you speak Italian. Americans are all very rich."

"I have but 10,000 francs a year."

"That implies a capital of 200,000 francs. Surely you can divide with one who has been unfortunate."

"You mean, I suppose, that I am in your power, and you demand a ransom of 100,000 francs?"

"You have stated the case correctly."

I stood thinking for a few minutes what I could do. I had no funds in Italy. The interest on my money invested in America was sent me quarterly. I had spent nearly all of my funds of the present quarter, and it would be two months before I received another remittance. I explained this to the bandit, but it did not appear to make much impression upon him.

"I have never seen an Italian bandit," I said, "but you don't fulfill my idea of one. You look like a gentleman."

I thought I could see him wince.

"You are right, signor."

"May I ask the cause of your being what you are?"

"Games of hazard. I was intending to follow a line something like that you are engaged in, but I not only lost my patrimony; I lost money for others. I became an outcast."

There was a tinge of sadness in his tone as he spoke this which induced me to proceed:

"How would you like to return for a brief season to your original or your intended occupation? I believe that I am on the track of a buried villa that formerly contained valuable works of art. I would be happy to have you join me."

His eye lighted up. The Italian, whatever he is, is artistic in his tastes, and in this man was added the fervor of an archaeologist. I saw that he would love to take a breathing spell from robbery in a work he loved.

"Whose villa are you hunting for?" he asked.

"Manlius Quintus Piso's."

"What data have you?"

I gave him the two authors who had written descriptions of the villa.

"There is another reference," he said. "I came upon it when I was beginning the study of archaeology."

He remembered the description given by an author with whom I was not familiar and repeated it to me verbatim in the Latin vernacular. I saw at once that with the two I had it would bring me much nearer the exact spot for which I was looking.

"Come," I said, turning my back to him, "take these weapons from my belt and do what you like with them. Then join me. We are very near the location of the Piso villa, but not quite. We must go southward about 300 yards."

He astounded me by telling me to keep my weapons and, uncocking his rifle, slung it on his back. Then we started out to pace the 300 yards, moving at an angle with each other of about twenty-five degrees. After pacing the distance each began to dig. We found nothing but dirt where we began, but we made together some fifty holes in an area of about a thousand feet in circumference. About sunset I heard my companion call to me. I went to him and found that he had come upon a pavement. He had been digging in a depression and had gone down about four feet from the surface.

Fortunately the moon rose before the sun set, and, anxious to go as far as possible with our work before attracting attention, we began to throw up dirt in earnest. It was soon evident from the marble pavement we uncovered that we had struck something fine and had not gone far before we came to what proved to be the impluvium (basin), which was in the center of all antique Roman houses. But at the time we exhumed only a small portion of it. By midnight we had come upon several statues, but they were broken in small bits. We worked on, and by dawn I struck a pair of marble feet.

Carefully removing the earth from about a statue lying flat on the ground, I came upon a quiver and a bow. The drapery was feminine. I hurried on, hoping that I had struck the Diana of which I had read. My hopes were confirmed on reaching the head, where above the forehead we found the star which always accompanied representations of this divinity.

That was as far as we deemed it prudent to go. I believed that the discovery we had made would greatly interest the government, to which I proposed to turn it over. After receiving information about my companion that would enable me to find him I hurried to Rome and to the office of the official charged with excavations. He listened to my story with wonder and delight and when I had finished asked me what I would expect for my find.

I told him of the bandit by whom I had been aided, and if the government would pardon him and give him some position that would enable him to make an honest living I would feel repaid for my discovery.

There is nothing more to tell except that the statue we unearthed proved a splendid work of art and was very little damaged. It was removed to the new gallery on the Esquiline hill opened by the government. The bandit received his pardon and employment in the archaeological department of the government.

Reversed the Verdict.

A prominent citizen of a large town went raging into the electric light company's office and declared that one of their wires had killed a pet tree on his premises.

"That tree," said he, "has been standing there for twenty years, and we regarded it as one of the family. My children played under it when they were babies, and it is associated with some of the pleasantest memories of my life. When it began to die we all mourned, and we could not imagine what ailed it until yesterday, when I noticed that a wire was lying right across a branch. My poor tree has been electrocuted, and I feel as if murder has been done in my house."

Considerably moved, the agent of the company went to view the scene of the tragedy and found the tree still alive, but feeble. When he came to trace the wire he discovered one end nailed to the roof of an old barn and the other twisted around a discarded pole. It had been cut off for at least two years and forgotten. But the occasion demanded something, so he made the following report:

"Tree alive; wire dead. Wire evidently killed by tree. Bill inclosed."

The Look.

Look up and not down. There is never a crown
In the dust and debris of the street.
The God who doth love us hath hung high above us
The crown that makes glory complete.

Face the east, not the west. You are not at your best
With your eyes set on stars sinking low.
But each rising star's ray, with its promise of day,
Will kindle your heart to a glow.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC OCEANS JOINED BY BELL TELEPHONE LINE

President Vail's Engineers Make It Possible For President Wilson to Send His Voice Across the Continent Instantly.

BELL, VAIL AND WATSON, CREATORS OF TELEPHONE, EXCHANGE GREETINGS OVER 4,400 MILE CIRCUIT

Public Officials of Cities on Two Coasts Take Part in Celebration and Congratulate One Another [illegible] Established Between East and West.

New York, January 25.—The completion of the long distance telephone line between New York and San Francisco was celebrated today. First, this city had speech with her California neighbor, 3,400 miles away. Then the lines that swing southward from New York brought Washington and San Francisco into telephonic touch. Down the coast to little Jekyl Island opposite Georgia, they carried the Golden Gate's greeting. To the North, Boston, the birthplace of the telephone, talked across the continent.

At the White House President Wilson spoke into the mouthpiece of his telephone and his voice was whirled across thirteen States to the shore of the Pacific.

President Wilson Talks.

President Wilson talked first to President Moore of the Panama-Pacific exposition. He said:

"It appeals to the imagination to speak across the continent. It is a fine omen for the exposition that the first thing it has done is to send its voice from sea to sea. I congratulate you on the fine prospects for a successful exposition. I am confidently hoping to take part in it, after the adjournment of congress. May I not send my greetings to the management and to all whose work has made it possible and has made it the great event it promises to be, and to convey my personal congratulations to you?"

Clear as a bell came back President Moore's reply:

"We are looking forward to your coming here. I think you will be pleased [illegible] what [illegible] done. [illegible] Mr. President, that you will never receive a welcome that will be more cordial and more enthusiastic."

President Wilson then talked to Mr. Thomas A. Watson, in San Francisco, with Dr. Alexander Graham Bell listening in on the line at New York. President Wilson said:

THEODORE N. VAIL,

President of the American Telephone and Telegraph company, who talked from Jekyl island to San Francisco over the new transcontinental line.

"I consider it an honor to be able to express my admiration for the inventive genius and scientific knowledge that has made this possible, and my pride that this vital cord should have been stretched across America as a new symbol of our unity and our enterprise. Will you not convey my cordial congratulations to Mr. Bell. And I want to convey to you my personal congratulations, sir."

The President then said to the inventor of the telephone, Doctor Bell, at New York:

"May I not congratulate you very warmly on this notable consummation of your long labors and remarkable achievement? You are justified in feeling a great pride in what has been done. This is a memorable day and I convey to you my warm congratulations, sir."

After talking with Doctor Bell, the President was asked by Mr. Kingsbury if he cared to say a word to Theodore N. Vail, president of the American Telegraph and Telephone Company, who is staying at Jekyl Island, off the coast of Georgia. "Why, yes, yes, certainly," answered the President. While the circuit was being arranged the President chatted with Mr. Kingsbury, several times expressing his admiration of the achievements in which he was a participant. Mr. Vail was then announced, and the President immediately placed the receiver to his ear, asking: "Is this Mr. Vail?" Mr. Vail's voice came over the wire so plainly that the President held his receiver lightly away from his ear, and then said:

"Mr. Vail, it is a great pleasure to hear your voice. I want to send you my congratulations on the consummation of this remarkable work. I am very sorry, also, to know that you are unwell." A pause ensued, the President listening to Mr. Vail's reply. The President then said: "Well, I envy you your ability to get off. Good-by, Mr. Vail."

But on a day when long distance telephone records were smashing up the country over, it was the talk between San Francisco and Jekyl Island that had the honor of breaking every world's record for long distance transmission. President Theodore N. Vail of the American Telephone and Telegraph company is spending the winter on Jekyl Island, and when he spoke to San Francisco, his voice had to travel 1,000 miles up the Atlantic seaboard to New York before it started on its transcontinental journey. When it sounded in the receiver at San Francisco it had gone 4,400 miles in all.

Statement of Mr. Vail.

Mr. Theodore N. Vail, speaking from Jekyl Island, Georgia, said:

"At the centennial exhibition at Philadelphia, the exhibit of the Bell System consisted of two telephones capable of talking from one part of the room to another. Faint as the transmitted speech was, it became at once the marvel of all the world, causing scientists as well as laymen to exclaim with wonder. Starting with these feeble instruments only, the Bell Company, by persistent study and incessant expenditures of immense sums of money, created an entire new art, inventing, developing and perfecting, making improvements, great and small in telephone transmitter, line, cable, switchboard and every other piece of apparatus and plant required for the transmission of speech. As the latest product of this unceasing organized effort, there has been dedicated to the service of the public today a transcontinental line 3,420 miles long, joining the Atlantic and the Pacific and carrying the human voice instantly and distinctly between San Francisco and New York and Boston and Washington. This telephone line is part of the Bell system of 21,000,000 miles of wire connecting 9,000,000 telephone stations located everywhere throughout the United States and giving to the American people telephone service unparalleled among the nations of the earth."

On a table in President Vail's office in New York was a replica of the first telephone transmitter to carry the human voice. It looked to be a crude enough affair. Tie down a drum-head over a wooden receiver, join the center of the drum-head to the free end of a receiver spring, arrange a mouthpiece over the drum-head—and there you have it.

There was further reminder of the telephone's babyhood in a coil of wire connected with the transmitter. This was part of the original wire over which Dr. Bell spoke the first words ever uttered by telephone, in his boarding house at 5 Exeter Place, Boston.

J. J. Carty Greets Dr. Bell.

One of the first to greet Dr. Bell as he entered was John Joseph Carty, Chief Engineer of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, under whose direction the transcontinental line was built. Mr. Carty said:

"This greatest of telephone lines which today has been dedicated to the service of the public, must always be distinguished because through its copper wires the voice of the Chief Magistrate of this nation has for the first time in our history been transmitted from the seat of government at Washington westward thirty-six hundred miles to the shores of the Pacific. Over this line the voice of President Wilson was carried with magic speed across rivers and plains and mountains, instantly reaching San Francisco where in clear tones it spoke his message of congratulation to men of achievement.

"Unable to be present with us in person, Mr. Theodore N. Vail has nevertheless taken part in these ceremonies, in a manner that fills the mind with amazement. By using his wonderful Bell system of organized men and organized wires he has talked to us here at New York from an island eleven hundred miles to the south, near the coast of Florida. From there he has spoken through the length and breadth of our land to the state of California, forty-four hundred miles away, thus attaining the longest distance ever achieved by the voice of man.

"We are filled with grateful feelings that Alexander Graham Bell and Thomas A. Watson have today talked to each other over this now historic line. Doctor Bell was the first to conceive of the true method and apparatus for transmitting speech electrically and Mr. Watson, following exactly the directions given to him by Doctor Bell, constructed with his own hands the first telephone. Bell was the first among men to talk by the electric telephone and Watson was the first to hear.

"There is before us an exact reproduction of this electric speaking telephone employed by Bell and Watson when first they talked to each other by wire. Through this instrument Doctor Bell has again talked to Mr. Watson, but this time how vast is the distance and how great the triumph.

"Of course he was not heard by any means as well as when he used our standard transmitter but well enough to be understood, we may be sure, and loud enough to excite a most pleasing sentiment. This original type of telephone talking over one of our modern lines, spoke across the continent more distinctly than it ever did from one room to another over the best line of former days. Thus does this homely first instrument give testimony to the marvelous improvements made in its plant by the Bell company during these intense intervening years."

Mr. Carty escorted Dr. Bell to the strange looking transmitter and its inventor pressed his lips to the mouthpiece.

Bell and Watson Talk.

"Ahoy! Ahoy! Mr. Watson, are you there? Do you hear me?" asked Mr. Bell in New York.

"Yes, Mr. Bell, I hear you perfectly. Do you hear me well?" replied Mr. Watson at his end of the line in San Francisco.

"Yes, your voice is perfectly distinct," said Bell. "It is as clear as if you were here in New York instead of being more than 3,000 miles away. You remember, Mr. Watson, that evening, 38 years ago when we conversed through the telephone on a real line for the first time?"

"Yes, indeed," answered Watson, "that line was two miles long, running from Boston to Cambridge. You were overjoyed at the success of the experiment."

"We are talking over 3,400 miles as easily and clearly as we talked over two miles 38 years ago," said Prof. Bell.

"The telephone men have certainly done wonderful things with your invention since that first outdoor test," said Mr. Watson. "We must not forget that the circuit we are talking over is really 6,800 miles long, as of course, the earth cannot be used for the return now as we used it then."

"I want to switch in another telephone and talk to you through that," said Dr. Bell, and suiting the action to the word he switched in a replica of his first telephone instrument. "I am now talking through an exact duplicate of the first telephone which was made in June, 1875," continued Dr. Bell, "can you hear me?"

"I hear perfectly, though less distinctly than with the other, of course," answered Mr. Watson.

Mr. Bell switched back to the standard transmitter and continued the conversation.

"What wonderful progress has been made by the Bell System since then to enable our voices to be transmitted over a circuit of 6,000 miles, without the least apparent distortion or weakening."

"Their work has been superb," declared Mr. Watson, "and superb also is the discipline of the organization that watches every inch of this long circuit to safeguard those feeble vibrations."

"All honor to the men who have rendered this great achievement possible," concluded Dr. Bell. "They have brought all the people of the United States within sound of one another's voices, and united them into one great brotherhood."

When the telephone had grown so that it could be taken outdoors on October 9, 1876, Dr. Bell had called "ahoy" across two miles of wire, just as he was calling now across three thousand, and it was not until sometime later that "hello" was used.

Statement by Mr. Bethell.

In speaking of the new transcontinental line, U. N. Bethell, senior vice-president of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, said:

"The completion of the transcontinental line is not only an epoch-marking event in scientific development, but also the opening door to better conditions, commercial and social, throughout the nation. It means the breaking down of old barriers. By facilitating the exchange of information and ideas it brings the most remote points in the country closer together than were points lying within a single state a quarter of a century ago. It broadens mutual understanding and appreciation and thus aids tremendously in the advance of civilization. This is one of the romantic and inspiring steps in the progress of the art as developed by our great and always mutually helpful organization which embraces in its ranks more than 150,000 men and women. To the organization as a whole this event will have significance that cannot be overestimated. It will exert an influence that will not end with day, but go on working for better and greater results through years to come. In some way, directly or indirectly, every efficient man and woman in the organization has contributed something to the achievement, and therefore, as a whole, the organization merits congratulations."

Greeting From Boston.

The following conversation took place between Thomas D. Lockwood in Boston, and Thomas B. Doolittle in San Francisco:

MR. LOCKWOOD speaking: "Good evening, Mr. Doolittle, I send you greeting from the birthplace of the telephone. It is worth while to have given the best part of our lives to the telephone service, to realize that we have reached this notable day and are privileged to take part in it. It recalls the earlier days when by building the Boston and Lowell line, the Boston and Providence lines, and the first experimental line between Boston and New York, this last supervised by yourself, the first steps in the march of long distance telephone communication were taken.

"That seems but yesterday, so fresh it is in my memory, and yet here we are celebrating the completion of the system to the Pacific coast, the crown and culmination, and that has been made possible by the combination and exercise of constant effort in engineering and invention, and constant profit by the teaching of experience."

MR. DOOLITTLE, IN SAN FRANCISCO, speaking: "Glad to hear you, Mr. Lockwood, and to exchange greetings and congratulations. I reciprocate your expressions of satisfaction in the successful accomplishment of this great work. Speaking of and looking backward over the history of telephone progress, we can both say, as did one of ancient times, 'all of which I saw and part of which I was.' But are you not going to invite me to dinner?"

MR. LOCKWOOD, replying: "Certainly; I am happy to invite you to dinner; but don't forget that times and conditions are changed. When in 1879 we opened the Lowell line, if you were in Lowell, you would have heard my invitation while I was giving it, and could have joined me inside of an hour, but now, and where you are, while you will hear with your own ears my invitation three hours before I give it you cannot reach the table until four or five days later."

Colonel Higginson Talks.

Col. Henry Higginson spoke to Mr. Thomas A. Watson in San Francisco and was followed by Mayor James M. Curley and Mr. Elmer J. Bliss, President of the Boston Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. P. L. Spaulding, President of the New England Telephone and Telegraph Company and George E. McFarland, President of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company exchanged greetings.

In New York it was 4 o'clock when Doctor Bell sent his "ahoy" across the continent, and one of the first of the guests to speak after him asked the time in San Francisco. Each one looked at his watch as the answer came back: "One o'clock." This started a flurry of figuring. Those who know sound waves and the rate they travel said that it would take four hours for a man's voice, unaided, granted the possibility of such titanic lungs, to travel to San Francisco through the air. On the wires it takes less than one-fifteenth of a second. Electricity was driving Dr. Bell's "ahoy" at the rate of 56,000 miles per second. Sound, unabetted, limps along in comparison, making only 1,160 feet per second.

DR. ALEXANDER GRAHAM BELL,

Work Takes Two Years.

The work of constructing the transcontinental line took two years, but the history of the work of making the poles and wires, set and strung by the construction crews who do their duty, runs back over the space of many years. It brings you into experiment stations and testing rooms and laboratories. It covers innumerable experiments and improvements. Every step forward in the development of telephony has been over a gigantic scrap heap. Bell's original transmitter has seventy-three descendants. Fifty-three types and styles of transmitters have been introduced since 1877. Within ten years the Bell System spent for construction and reconstruction an amount more than equal to the present book value of the entire plant.

And what is true of transmitters and receivers is even truer of all that lies between the terminals of the transcontinental line, for it is in this field that the engineers had their real problems. To fill in the gap between Denver and the Coast with wires and poles was comparatively simple. The task they confronted was to begin at New York and working all along the line, make the multitudinous improvements necessary for a 3,400 mile talk. Transmitters, switchboards, metallic circuits, hard-drawn copper wire and loading coils all had to be attuned to the transcontinental keynote. There's a hint of the real achievement in what the engineers did with the loading coil. When the loading coil left the hands of its inventor it was as large as a keg, and the fine iron wires inside it cost a mint to make. To-day the loading coil is a few inches in size, and in the New York-San Francisco line there are 13,000 miles of that wire whose cost of manufacture is comparatively low.

Big Problems Solved.

For those in the Day Street offices there was striking proof that the problem of transmitting speech is not solved by any loud-speaking transmitter in the replica of Bell's invention that lay before them. They realized as they looked at that instrument, crude in the light of all that has happened to transmitters since, what the engineers had accomplished to make it speak across the whole United States. They saw that it was not a question of more horse power, that the telephone engineer could not speed up dynamos or start more engines running to get what he was after. For telephony's motive power is the feeblest thing imaginable. It is a mere breath. And the engineer must preserve and hurry to their destination practically instantaneously the thousands of minute waves made in the air by the voice with all their separate shapes and individualities preserved. In speaking of his engineers' problems, President Vail said:

THOMAS A. WATSON.

Who made the first telephone 40 years ago according to Doctor Bell's specifications. Mr. Watson in San Francisco talked to Doctor Bell in New York over the transcontinental circuit.

"The solution was found only in the cumulative effect of improvements, great and small, in telephone, transmitter, line, cable, switchboard and every other piece of apparatus or plant required in the transmission of speech."

Nine Million Telephones.

But, proud as telephone engineers are of what they have accomplished, they will tell you that this transcontinental line is by no means the last word in the telephone's development in this country. The new line is the backbone of a network of 21,000,000 miles of wire woven round 9,000,000 telephone stations of the Bell System. The completion of this line is a mighty step forward toward that ideal of universal service preached by President Vail and his associates back in the Seventies. As they interpreted universal service, it meant that anyone anywhere could speak to anyone anywhere in this country by taking his telephone receiver off the hook. The line is still in the hands of the engineers. There is an amount of field work to be done before it is opened to the public for commercial use, but when it is opened it will mean that a New York business man can talk to his San Francisco associate without leaving his desk.

The telephone in the United States has always set the pace for the rest of the world. It has "made in the U. S. A." stamped on its very soul.

Length of line, 3,400 miles. Route: From San Francisco to Salt Lake City 770 miles; from Salt Lake City to Denver, 580 miles; from Denver to Omaha, 585 miles; from Omaha to Chicago, 500 miles. At Chicago the line branches, one branch going to Pittsburgh, 545 miles, and then to New York, 390 miles from Pittsburgh; the other branch goes from Chicago to Buffalo, 603 miles and then down to New York, 350 miles. There is a continuation of the line from Buffalo to Boston, 465 miles long. From Pittsburgh there is a continuation extending to Baltimore, 250 miles away on to Washington, 265 miles. Philadelphia is reached by a branch from the line extending from Pittsburgh to New York, connecting at Newtown Square.

The diameter of the hard-drawn copper wire of number 8 B. W. G. gauge used in the line is .165 inch. The total weight of one circuit consisting of two such wires is 1,480 tons.

There are 130,000 poles in the line.

THIRTY-FIVE YEARS AGO
Jan. 29, 1880

There is great danger of a short ice crop this winter.

The bottom has dropped out of the January thaw and out of the roads also.

Trains will be held on this branch at Adrian on Saturday evening, Jan. 31st, for Pinafore and Monday evening, Feb. 2nd, for Bob Ingersoll.

Give the base ball boys a rousing benefit by attending the masquerade at the opera house next Tuesday evening. Admission to the gallery, 15c

Dr. Perry of Franklin called at our office on business last Tuesday. In answer to the question 'How are the roads now?' he replied "There is just one mud hole between Tecumseh village and my home."

Eli Gray returned home last week from Ireland where he has been spending the winter. He looks as hale and hearty as a back-woods man. Irish air evidently agrees with him. He expects to remain at home during the coming summer.

Lavern Wheeler is home again having finished his job of scenic painting for the Hudson opera house. He has done a fine job for them and they are well satisfied with his work

A movement has been started in Adrian to enforce the new liquor law. Wouldn't it be a good plan to do some of that business here in Tecumseh.

The rooms in the second story of the Hewitt block are being repaired and when completed will be occupied by Dr. Catlin for an office. They will make a fine suit of rooms for that purpose.

A. W. Slayton & Co. have sold their planning mill to Wolcott & Temple. There will be no change in the business as at present conducted.

The pupils of the high school in Tecumseh have organized a literary society which they call "The Tecumseh High School Lyceum." The meetings will be held on Monday evening of each week at the Central building. The officers are as follows:

President—John Whelan
Vice President—Hettie McClue
Secretary—Mans Walker
Treasurer—Harry Dunn

The telegraph line between the depot and the express office has been completed and it will undoubtedly be a great convenience.

Below is a table showing the total shipments from the Tecumseh station of certain articles of export during the year 1879:

Wheat lbs.	1,683,649
Live stock, car loads	118
Flour, bbls	45,346
Oats, lbs	870,419
Barley lbs.	684,445

We are indebted to J. A. Hogbra for these figures.

TIPTON MONUMENT

Short History of the First Soldiers' Memorial in the United States.

By the passage of time all things become dearer and we have more interest in them, and more particularly when they carry with them the memory of our friends and comrades who gave their lives that the nation might live. And this is true of the monument that stands as a silent sentinel to guard the last resting place of those who gave their lives to save the union during the war, and my thoughts go back to my town and birthplace and there we find the first monument erected in the United States, which was erected and dedicated on the 4th of July in 1866. The services were held on the porch of the Congregational church, at which I was present, and the following is the program according to the best of my recollection:

Song by choir, led by M. D. Alexander; invocation by Rev. J. W. Allen; song by choir; oration by Dr. Charles Bind; song by choir.

The procession was then formed and marched to the grove of Wm Camburn where a fine picnic dinner was partaken of and much enjoyed by all. After dinner more speeches and songs were given and all seemed so happy that the war was over, except those who had dear ones that never came back. These thoughts saddened many hearts on that day and the wounds that war caused are not all healed yet.

The officers of the day were: President, T. M. Camburn; marshall, P. C. Mills; assistant marshall, Merrill Estabrook; cannoeer, John Tripp.

The choir consisted at that time of M. D. Alexander, Jas. H. Hunter, Mrs. D. C. Blair, Miss Teresa Robinson, Miss Franc Robison, Miss Edyth Love, Miss Charlotte Knight, Oscar Alexander and D. C. Blair.

This monument is not only in memory of the 31 soldiers who wore the blue, but it is a lasting evidence of the patriotism that stirred the people of Franklin at that early date. This monument was built by Orson Knight of Adrian and cost $1,750 00. The subscriptions which were solicited by Andrew J. Hunter and P. C. Mills in the western part of town and Samuel Wilson and D. W. Mapes in the eastern part. I have it on good authority that Mrs. Lydia Smith, who sent three sons into the army, two of whom never came back, headed the list with $50 00, but I think that many others did as well. The soldiers who had just been discharged were allowed to pay $1.00, on the supposition that they had done their part already. No casualties were reported for the day, except that of Dr. J. D. Tripp, who, while firing the salutes by signals from the church was made deaf in one ear.

I must not forget the Ladies' Aid society, presided over by Mrs John Keeney, which not only did very much to aid this movement, but were also active during the war in sending supplies to the boys at the front. After the war they put their toils and tears into that simple shaft in the cemetery which stands 33 feet high, and every Decoration day it is well covered with flowers and evergreens in memory of those who gave their lives for the cause of liberty. The monument was erected in memory of those who died during the war and were residents of Franklin. This beautiful shaft with the old flag wrapped about its spire can be seen for several miles away.

The monument faces the west and has upon that side the following inscription: "Union and liberty, one and inseparable, now and forever."

The south side inscription reads, "Preserve the Union of the states, cemented by our prayers and tears and our blood."

On the east side: "Erected July 4, 1866, by the citizens of Franklin as a memorial to the brave and patriotic men who represented them in battle and gave their lives in defense of our country."

On the north side: These died that the nation might live, representative government be perpetuated and personal rights secured."

Co. E, 18th Mich, Inf.—Wm C Card, Jerry Burroughs, Philo T. Mills, Chas. S. Eddy, John P. Barnum (lost on the Sultana), George R. Mason (lost on the Sultana), Wm. J. Pentecost and Wm R. Warner.

Co. B. 8th Cal.—Virgil Tripp, John Smith, Lympert Elsasser,

Allen C. Smith, company sergeant.

Co. H. 11th Mich. Cav.—Seymour S. Skinner and Alfred Lambin.

There was a fine post and chain fence around the monument orginally but it has long since gone to decay and has been removed. The monument however, is in a good state of preservation and bids fair to stand for years to come as a memorial to Franklin's dead heroes.

The Womans Home Missionary Society of the M. E. was entertained at the home of Mrs H. R. Conklin Thursday afternoon. The study of the afternoon was "Lo" the poor Indian. A fine program was carried out and refreshments of corn bread, dried beef, and grape juice were served carrying out as near as could be the diet of the Indian. There was a large attendance and several new members were added to the Society.

TOO MODEST?

Michigan people are apt to think that when a manufacturer says, "My product is best," he means it, but maybe his enthusiasm makes the statement a trifle exaggerated. Therefore, it is interesting to find that one manufactor is accused of being too modest in regard to his 68 year-old liniment. Messrs. Nicholson & Stuhr of Cheyenne, Wyo., says: "We know from personal experience that Hanford's Balsam of Myrrh will do all and more than the Hanford Company claim for it."

MRS L. C. BLOOD

Mrs. Fannie E. Blood, wife of L. C. Blood of Lansing, passed away at their home Tuesday morning at 6 o'clock after a long illness, aged 71 years.

Mrs. Blood was formerly Fannie E. Conkling, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Hudson Conkling (both deceased) and resided here until her marriage in 1861 to LeRoy C Blood also of Tecumseh. In 1874 they removed to Lansing where they have since made their home.

Mrs. Blood early united with the Tecumseh Presbyterian church and transferred her membership to a Lansing when they settled there.

She is survived by her husband, a son Will C Blood of Lansing and a daughter Mrs May L. Hebbard of Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Blood was of a happy, cheerful disposition and was a favorite in the social life of Tecumseh where a host of her old friends grieve to hear of her passing away.

The funeral was held in Lansing yesterday afternoon and the body was brought here today for burial in Brookside cemetery.

Miss Margeret McClue entertained a number of her friends at supper Wednesday evening at her home in Macon. Her brother Don came up with the sleigh and gave them a fine sleighride of nine miles which gave a good appetite for the bountiful spread that was waiting for them. Those who were entertained were Mrs. Rose Burrow and the Misses Ethel Burrow Ailie Owens, Vesta Wilson, Mary McIntyre, Bessie Johnston, Agnes and Margeret McWilliams and Nealie Coller. They report a big time.

BUSINESS CHANGE

Otto Garlinghouse Purchases the Hayden Garage

The business known through out the county and state as the Hayden Garage has been purchased by Otto Garlinghouse and will be run by him in conjunction with his present business. It may prove interesting to many to know that the business known as the Garlinghouse Livery has been in the same location and in the Garlinghouse name for about 35 years, first under the name of Garlinghouse Bros., then G. B. Garlinghouse and the last two years by the present owner.

Many new changes are contemplated among which is a new up to date office, which is already under course of construction adjoining the present garage on the north and which will be used to take the place of both offices now in the garage and in the livery. Two large plate glass windows will be placed in front, a rest room and other modern conveniences will be provided for the accomodation for patrons.

The large addition just completed will be arranged both for storage of automobiles and for a farmer's Ten Cent Hitch. Modern equipment will be installed for all departments, including general repairing, vulcanizing painting, overhaulingetc A thoroughly competent and experienced automobile expert and garage man will have charge of the Auto Repair Shop and especial attention will be shown to this end of the business.

It is intended to give practically unlimited service both day and night not only in the carriage and auto livery and taxi service, but be able to accommodate patrons at all hours with anything needed in the line of auto supplies and accessories, storage, gasoline or oils. A gasoline street pump will be installed and free air will always be on tap.

The drive way will be changed to the south side of the building with a 18 foot entrance with exit both in the rear and side opening into the new addition and leading out into the street. The entire 115 foot frontage will be covered with an ivory tinted cement stucco coating, while the inside of all buildings will be repainted a light color. More sky lights will be built in with the intention of making this one of the best equipped and best lighted garage and service stations in this vicinity. By giving prompt and courteous service to everyone and as reasonable rates as good business management will permit, it will be the intention to try to make every customer a booster for the Garlinghouse Garage.

The No Name Club was very pleasantly entertained Tuesday at the home of Mr. and Mrs John Heesen. Four tables of progressive pedro were played, Mrs. O. G. Hunt and R. A. Heesen winning the honors. Refreshments were served at the close of the games and a good time reported.

LYMAN HOWE'S PICTURES

A good house greeted the coming of Howe's moving pictures Tuesday evening, the audience being a most appreciative one. Pictures showing the Philllipines as they were and as they are now under the new conditions were very instructive and interesting. A trip through Japan was then taken and was full of deep interest from the beginning to the end of the trip. The next to invite attention was the construction of the Cash register, with its wonderful mechanism piece by piece, until the completed work that required five days to accomplish was done in five minutes on the canvas. At this time when the navies of the world are so much in the lime light, the pictures showing Uncle Sam's Navy were of particular interest as well as our soldiers of the sea.

A trip to the Brooklyn Navy Yard a trip to sea on some of our largest battleships destroyers and submarines and the housekeeping of a thousand men, target practice, the firing of torpedoes were some of the interesting things shown. In the drill of the men on land they formed the words Lyman H. Howe, as they stretched their length on the ground. Perhaps the most thrilling event was the firing of the big guns at the audience and when the smoke disappeared to see Old Glory where the guns were discharged but a second before That the entertainment was a success goes without saying.

Charges are made of irregularities in several precincts. The first hearing is set for Saturday.

THE OLD LAKE SHORE

The following, just received by G. J. Ziehr, ticket agent for the New York Central Railroad Co. formerly the Lake Shore, railroad will explain itself to our readers:

Cleveland, January 15, 1915

FELLOW EMPLOYE:

Mr F. S. Curtis, Signal Maintainer, Elkhart, Ind., sent the within poem to the undersigned following my "Employes' New Year Greeting" and reference therein to the recent passing, by merger of the L. S. & M. S. with the New York Central. It is not claimed by Mr Curtis as being entirely a finished "Shakesperian" product. But it seems to me it has the true "Lake Shore" spirit that has appealed to all, and I have therefore printed to distribute to old employes, who I am sure will preserve it.

D. C. MOON,
General Manager.

Past and gone is the famous name
Known as "The Old Lake Shore."
And the new one will never sound the same
Though we speak it for twenty years or more.
Ye Old Lake Shore, I knew you well
And you were dear to my heart,
In memories which no pen can tell,
For of you I've been a part.
In wintry day and springtime sky,
In summer's blazing heat,
I've seen the trains go speeding by
Trains that were hard to beat.
And my heart would fill with pleasant prides.
At the power and beauty laid
Along their glistening moving sides
As sixty miles they made.
We bury the name like the name of a friend,
And we cherish within our breast
A memory which no power can end,
Till we are stilled by death.
Perhaps when we sight the shining strand,
And pass through the golden door,
We'll take a train for Beulah Land,
Once more on "The Old Lake Shore."

The Ruling Passion.

George Bernard Shaw, the author and playwright, tells this story of a cricket match which took place in his native town not long ago.

"The match, married men versus single men, was in progress," avers Mr. Shaw. "The 'married' innings had closed with a total of 87, toward which Jones, the local grocer, had contributed a lucky 20. Scarcely had the 'singles' commenced to bat when the startling news of a local train disaster reached the ground, whereupon Jones evinced a worried look.

"'What's the matter, Jones?' queried the captain.

"'Well,' Jones replied reflectively, 'my wife was on that train.'

"'Too bad, old man. I'm sorry,' murmured the captain, greatly touched. 'In that case, of course, you want to get away at once?'

"'Oh, no; it isn't that,' explained Jones. 'But, you see, if anything has happened to Annie I ought to be playing for the single chaps.'"

INTERNAL CATARRH
"Peruna Has Done Wonders For Me. I Was So Weak."
Mrs. M. P. Curry, P. O. Box 615, Petersburg, Ills., writes: "I have been troubled with internal catarrh since my girlhood, and was sick in bed three months. When I was able to get up I was so weak and thin I could hardly walk. What I ate disagreed with me. I had stomach and liver trouble, and my feet and limbs were swollen so I could scarcely drag around.
"I took Peruna and it has done wonders for me. My cure was a surprise to my friends for they never expected to see me well again. I just took two bottles of Peruna after doctoring for five months and growing worse all the time."
Continuous Headache.
Mrs. Esther M. Milner, Box 191, De Graff, Ohio, writes: "I was a terrible sufferer from internal catarrh, and had the headache continuously. I was not able to do my housework for myself and husband. You recommended Peruna. I took four bottles and was completely cured. I think Peruna a wonderful medicine and have recommended it to my friends."

A TECUMSEH CITIZEN COMES TO THE FRONT

Tells His Friends And Neighbors Of His Experience

Every Tecumseh resident should read what a neighbor says. His testimony can be relied upon. Here are his own words.

W. C. Witherell, W. Potawatamie St., Tecumseh, says: "I had acute pains across the small of my back and in my hips. Often, after stooping a sharp twinge darted through my loins obliging me to lie down. I was laid in bed for several days and I believe that the trouble was caused by excessive stooping. When I learned of Doan's Kidney Pills, I got a supply at Wright & Son's Drug Store and a few boxes restored me to good health. Since then, whenever I have felt in need of a kidney medicine, I have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and the results have been very pleasing. I have had no reason to change my high opinion of Doan's Kidney Pills, which I expressed some years ago."

ADVICE FOR THE BRIDE.

How to Successfully Conduct Church and Home Weddings.

At a church wedding the groom, with his best man, generally awaits the bride at the altar. On entering the church the ushers come first, two abreast; the bridesmaids next, also two abreast; the maid of honor, matron of honor or flower girl next, and finally the bride, leaning on the arm of her father or some other male relative.

On leaving the church the bride and groom go first, the flower girl or matron or maid of honor next, then the bridesmaids in double file as before, or with the ushers. The best man goes out with the maid of honor. The father or male relative joins the mother and other relatives in leaving the church.

At a home wedding the bride and groom may enter the parlor together, preceded by the ushers and bridesmaids, or the groom may enter with the minister and bride with her father or male relative.

Guests invited to the reception go in leisurely fashion from church to residence, giving the bridal party time to arrange its ranks for the arrivals.

The bride introduces her husband to any of her friends whom he may not know, and he performs a like service for his bride.

If a buffet breakfast or lunch is served guests come and go to the dining room as at an afternoon tea. If a formal breakfast is served the bridal party is seated first and guests are grouped at small tables.

Small boxes of wedding cake are generally piled upon convenient tables in the hall for guests to carry away as souvenirs.

Wedding gifts may be sent to the bride at any time after invitations are received. They must be acknowledged immediately upon receipt by the bride to be in a friendly, personal note.

The family pays all the expenses of the wedding, including cards, the groom paying only for the ring, the bride's bouquet, the minister's fee and the carriage which takes him and his best man to the house or the church and himself and his bride from the house to the depot.

When the bride retires to change from wedding gown to traveling suit she throws her bouquet back among the guests and the girl who catches it is supposed to be the next bride in the party.

Guests at a wedding must call on the bride promptly after the latter's first day at home is announced. If evenings at home are announced married couples and men are supposed to call on the evenings named. Single girls can call during the day.

The groom gives souvenir gifts to his best man and the ushers, if he so desires. The bride performs a similar office for her attendants. The groom's gift to the bride is generally some good piece of jewelry, which is the only ornament she wears at her wedding.

The glove on the finger which is to receive the ring may be split open before the ceremony, thus saving confusion.

The bride may carry a white prayer book instead of flowers if she so desires.

How to Make a Very Small Bedroom Attractive.

When a bedroom or small dressing room is papered with anything but a plain or neutral paper bright colored or flowered chintz should never be used, but often a little color is needed to add tone to the room.

In a case of this kind one of the new bedspreads, which are so pretty and easily made, is just the thing to give the necessary color. Select a plain white spread of a good quality and rather heavy. Cut from chintz a bunch of roses or a spray of gay colored flowers and paste one in each corner with a larger one for the center. Sew to the spread and finish the raw edges with a fine feather stitch or with a long and short buttonhole stitch.

This idea can be carried out for scarfs to cover the dressing table and bureau. Make the scarf of linen cut to fit the top of each and finish the edges with a scallop or a hem and finish this with the stitch that was used on the spread. Cut out the flowers and applique to the edges of the scarf. Bunches of the same flowers can be added to the corners of the white curtains with good effect.

Curing a Cold.

The water cure is very ancient. In an old prescription book of a famous physician of more than a hundred years ago this curious remedy for a cold is found: "Let ye patient who feels a cold coming on eat of a fine, big salt herring just before going to bed. This will make ye patient drink plenty of water." If you have not strength of purpose to drink freely of water for the cold's sake make yourself thirsty as best you can—only take all the water possible.

The Final Precaution.

"You treated the accusations with silent contempt, of course?"

"I did."

"And then with haughty indifference?"

"Yes."

"Then you laughed them to scorn?"

"Certainly."

"And finally repelled them with just indignation?"

"Exactly."

"Then you'd better see a good criminal lawyer next."—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Game of Birds.

Have as many small tables as you have sets of players, and the sets may include as many young people as can be seated at a table. Provide a box of pasteboard letters for each table and place them face downward. The first player draws a letter and lays it face downward, calling its name. The first player that speaks the name of the bird beginning with that letter wins it and also the chance to draw another. The player winning the greatest number of letters is entitled to a prize, while the one who guesses the least should be presented with an elaborate fool's cap.

Heard in the Hall.

"What's the matter with the stovepipe hat, I wonder?" asked the umbrella of the cane.

"He's stuck up because he's always on top," answered the cane.

"Pooh, pooh! I don't think he's such a much," said the umbrella. "If it wasn't for me he would have all the starch taken out of him many times."—Philadelphia Press.

Neatness In School.

When school is over for the day
And books and pencils put away,
Remember, please, in every case,
That all things have their proper place.
A tidy desk arranged just so
Will save a lot of time, you know;
A little boy I knew was late
Because he couldn't find his slate.

Gentlemen:—"It gives me much pleasure to be able to send you a testimonial, if by its reaching some sufferer your medicines will do as much for him as they have for me. At the age of fourteen I was troubled a great deal with malaria and billiousness, accompanied with the worst sort of large boils. I was persuaded by my parents, who have always been strong believers in Dr. Pierce's remedies, to try the Golden Medical Discovery. I took one bottle and the boils all disappeared, but I did not stop at one bottle, I took three and the malaria all left me and I have had no more boils to this day, thanks to the 'Golden Medical Discovery' for my relief.
"Following an operation for appendicitis two years ago I was troubled very much with constipation and I have been trying Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets and they have rid me of the troublesome gas and have aided me in conquering the whole trouble; thanks again for the 'Pellets' and for the advice I have obtained from The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." For the Children

Playing soldier is very popular with the young folks of the nations at war in Europe. They do not realize what a terrible calamity war is and in their innocence think it is grand to be a soldier. Recently at Aldershot, which is a great military camp in England, the camera man snapped a little boy arrayed in the uniform of a hussar. The hussars are cavalrymen and in times of peace wear a gorgeous uniform ornamented with gold braid, and on their heads are caps or shakos made of fur. Probably the miniature soldier's father is a member of this arm of the service, and his mother clothed him in military regalia as a token of patriotism. Anyhow, the little fellow makes a most interesting and cute picture.

A Funny Animal.

The armadillos live exclusively in the warmer parts of the earth. If you were to meet one, you would know it immediately by the peculiar strong, horny plates with which its body is defended. When attacked these odd animals roll themselves up, wrap their tails round them, and raise the whole array of sharp edged scales with which their body is covered, and bid defiance to almost any enemy except man. They live on ants and termites, or white ants, as they are called. They capture the insects by thrusting among them their long, slender tongues, covered with a gummy substance. When the tongue is covered it is quickly withdrawn, and the ants swallowed. To gain access to the ants the armadillos are furnished with powerful claws to tear down the dwellings of their prey. The natives of the countries where they live consider them great delicacies when roasted in their shells.—St. Nicholas.

Thirty white horses upon a red hill. Now they tramp, now they champ, now they stand still. Answer.—Gums and teeth.

Nature requires five, custom gives seven, laziness takes nine and wickedness eleven. Answer.—Hours of sleep.

I have a little sister. They call her Peep Peep. She wades through the waters deep; she climbs the mountains high, high, high. Poor little thing—she has but one eye! Answer.—Star.

What flowers are always under your nose? Answer.—Tulips.

HOW TO CURE A CHRONIC COUGH

Jackson, Miss.—"I am a carpenter, and the grippe left me not only with a chronic cough, but I was run-down, worn out and weak. I took all kinds of cough syrups but they did me no good. I finally got so weak I was not able to do a day's work, and coughed so much I was alarmed about my condition. One evening I read about Vinol and decided to try it. Before I had taken a quarter of a bottle I felt better, and after taking two bottles my cough is entirely cured, all the bad symptoms have disappeared and I have gained new vim and energy."—JOHN L. DENNIS, 711 Lynch Street, Jackson, Miss.

The reason Vinol is so successful in such cases is because the active medicinal principles of cod liver oil contained in Vinol rebuilds wasting tissues and supplies strength and vigor to the nerves and muscles while the tonic iron and wine assist the red corpuscles of the blood to absorb oxygen and distribute it through the system, thus restoring health and strength to the weakened, diseased organs of the body.

Louise de Chapporal

As a Child She Was Condemned to the Guillotine During the Reign of Terror

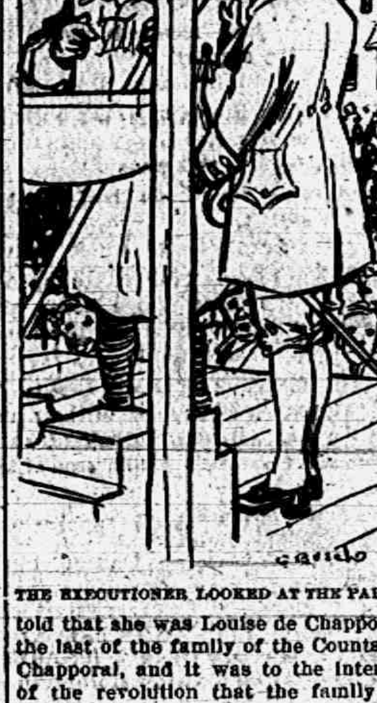
By JOHN L. TREVOR

During the French revolution among those who believed in securing certain reforms from the king was Edmond de Bouvier, a younger son of Count de Bouvier. He was enthusiastic for the cause until it passed into the hands of those who were infuriated, like wild animals, by the taste of blood; then he wished to withdraw. He was thinking of leaving France when he received the appointment of judge, before whom persons who were to be got rid of would be brought for condemnation.

De Bouvier was horrified, suspecting that the appointment had been given him with a view to sending him to the guillotine on a charge of sympathizing with the royalists. He would receive from Robespierre, who was then in control, a list of those who were to be condemned, and when they were brought before him it would be expected that he would do the bidding of his superior. If he refused he would be sent to execution himself. Nor would his refusal save those whom he was expected to condemn.

De Bouvier was young and wished to live. Indeed, he hoped, if his life was spared till this flame of vengeance had burned itself out, to be of service to his country. Summoning his resolution, he went to the courtroom the morning after his appointment, and, by doing what another would do if he did not, won the confidence of those in power, while at the same time he was on the watch for an opportunity to get out of France.

He had condemned most of those who were brought before him, standing up under the ordeal by summoning all his fortitude when a child, a girl, was brought before him. The judge flinched. Calling to him one who had charge of the prisoners, he asked him why one so young had been brought before him for condemnation. He was told that she was Louise de Chapporal, the last of the family of the Counts de Chapporal, and it was to the interest of the revolution that the family be eradicated.



THE EXECUTIONER LOOKED AT THE PAPER.

"But who ordered her to be brought here?"

"Citizen Robespierre."

"Is he willing to stand for the execution of a child?"

"No, M. le Juge. As soon as she has been dispatched it will be announced that a mistake has been made."

For a moment De Bouvier meditated whether to step down from his chair and surrender himself to be dealt with as an enemy to the revolution. But an idea struck him—not that there was much expectation of carrying it out without his own condemnation, but there was a faint hope. At any rate, there was hope for the child.

"How old are you, little girl?" he asked, with a pity in his voice he could not control.

"Seven," replied the child, with a smile.

"Have you a papa and a mamma?"

"Yes, but they have taken them away."

The judge bit his lip to retain his equanimity. He knew that they had taken her parents to the guillotine.

"That will do," he said to the man in charge of her. And she was led away among those who were to be executed.

These prisoners were to go to the guillotine the next day. That evening De Bouvier went to a clothing shop and bought a pair of loose trousers, a blouse and a red silk handkerchief. Then he bought a suit of boy's clothes. Taking these with him, he went to a baker's and purchased a dozen loaves of bread and one of those wooden vessels in which bread is carried by bakers in Paris. These articles he deposited in a room he had hired.

In the morning, putting a razor in his pocket, he sallied forth in the direction of the courtroom, where he was expected to send more victims to their long home. But turning into a street that led to the Place de la Revolution he went toward the guillotine. A rumbrel passed him, loaded with persons going to execution, and among them he saw the condemned child. She, too, saw him, smiled and waved her hand.

He hurried on. When he reached the guillotine the victims were being unloaded. Stepping up to the executioner, he took from his pocket the parchment appointing him a judge and showed it to him.

"I condemned these prisoners yesterday," he said, "and I made a mistake. This child is not to be executed."

The executioner looked at the paper and said nothing. It was none of his business who was to be executed. De Bouvier then spoke to the officer in charge of the troops surrounding the guillotine, but did not show the evidence of his authority, for he was known to the officer.

"This child got on the list by mistake."

"Yes, M. le Juge."

"I am going to take her away."

The officer hesitated, then said that he supposed it would be all right, as he would expect the judge to take the responsibility in the case. This De Bouvier then spoke to the officer in child by the hand, led her away.

He did not hurry till he entered a narrow street leading from the Champs Elysees, then walked as rapidly as the child was able. Taking her to the room he had hired, he shaved off his beard, then put on the baker's costume, tied the handkerchief about his neck, dressed the little girl in boy's clothes and cut off her long hair. Then, putting the receptacle filled with the bread on his head and taking the child by the hand, he went downstairs and out on to the street.

Meanwhile, a new batch of prisoners were brought to the courtroom to be condemned by Judge de Bouvier. The judge did not appear, but those in charge of the prisoners, thinking that he had been belated, waited for him. When an hour had passed without his coming, a messenger was sent to his lodging. He was not there. An announcement of the fact that the judge was not at court and could not be found was made to Robespierre. At once notification was given to all in sympathy with the revolution to look out for the missing judge and arrest him if found. An hour later word reached Robespierre that the missing judge had taken away Louise de Chapporal from the guillotine. The manager of the revolution was now certain that De Bouvier had [illegible] his order and had taken to flight. But he must pass the city barricades, and orders were given to the gatekeepers to look out for a man and a little girl.

When he reached the barricade, the soldier of the gate was about to pass him when a man darted up on horseback with Robespierre's order. The fugitive was refused a passage till he could be investigated.

"Investigated!" cried De Bouvier. "I have no time. I must carry this bread to my customers living outside the barricade."

"But I am ordered to stop Judge de Bouvier," replied the sentinel, "and a little girl."

De Bouvier laughed. "Do I look like a judge? And you are told to stop a girl, not a boy."

The sentry called a sergeant, who looked at the two wayfarers and consulted the order. For a moment the man and the child were between life and death. Fate threw the die, and life won.

"Go on," said the sergeant. "There's no need to keep persons from their bread."

The barricade once passed, De Bouvier found himself on the road leading toward Calais. But he had not gone far before he took to the woods for the day, and on reaching another road he changed his direction, resolving to head for the Belgian frontier. He peddled bread along his route, and when he had sold one lot he bought another. Couriers were sent out notifying the revolutionists on this route, the one usually taken by emigres, to stop any young man with or without a little girl who answered the description of the missing judge. De Bouvier's two precautions threw those who were looking for him off his track. They did not know he was disguised as a baker nor that the child with him was a girl. Besides, the fugitives appeared to be commoners and not aristocrats, as was given out.

After several narrow escapes De Bouvier, with his charge, crossed the border into a country where he was safe. He went to Belgium, where he turned Louise over to some emigre ladies, who on hearing her sad story agreed to care for her. Then he went to sleep, happy that if he had been obliged to condemn certain persons to death he had been able to save a child and had escaped with his own life.

When Napoleon was made First Consul De Bouvier returned to Paris. He entered the army and became a colonel. Louise de Chapporal did not return to France till the restoration of the Bourbons after the final fall of Napoleon. She was then a woman and began to hunt for the man who had saved her from the guillotine. Through those to whom he had committed her in Belgium she learned his name and sent him word that a lady wished him to call upon her. He did so and was informed that she was Louise de Chapporal.

Mademoiselle or, rather, the Countess de' Chapporal regained her estates through the king and was very rich. She gave herself and her fortune to the man who had during those frightful days risked his own life to save hers.

HOW TO MAKE SEVERAL SORTS OF CAKE.

If a cake cracks open while baking it contains too much flour. Use half a cupful less next time.

If you want a very fine grained cake beat well with a silver fork after mixing.

If you want a spongy, light cake use sour milk; if a heavier one, use sweet milk in it.

For a small cake or cookies have a hot oven and for a large, rich cake a slow oven.

Sift your flour before measuring. Sift the baking powder with it to insure thorough blending.

In making fruit cake add the fruit before putting in the flour and it will not fall to the bottom of the cake. This is better than flouring the fruit, which often leaves unbaked flour clinging to the fruit after it is baked.

In creaming butter and sugar where the former is hard never warm the butter. Warm the bowl or the sugar to make the butter blend; otherwise the flavor and texture of the cake will be changed.

TROUBLE LURKS IN SHIP BUYING

Purchase of Interned Vessels Held Unneutral Act.

FIGHT OPENS IN SENATE AGAIN

Administration Will Be Asked to Make Clear Just What Vessels It Intends to Acquire—Sale of Vessels of Neutrals Would Not Add to Commerce Capacity.

Washington, Feb. 1.—The situation in regard to the ship purchase bill, especially in its bearing upon foreign relations, has now reached a point where the administration soon will be obliged to make some statement on the subject.

Secretary of State Bryan, who received the British communication making it clear that Great Britain would regard purchase and operation of the interned belligerent ships by the United States as an unneutral act, has arrived in Washington, but declined to make any comment on the disclosures during his absence.

Administration Must Explain.

It has become known that pressure will be brought to bear on the administration from congress with a view to a clearing up of the government's intentions regarding the purchase of ships under the proposed legislation and the attitude of Great Britain and the allied governments.

It has now been established that the British government, in response to Mr. Bryan's request, made it clear that it would regard as an unneutral act the release by the United States of the interned German and Austrian ships; also that the French admiralty rules, now in effect, require the seizure of all such vessels, and that the views of Russia are in accord with those of France.

There is, therefore, no room for doubt that any vessels of the proposed government lines which were formerly under the Austrian or German flags will promptly be seized by either the French or British if they take to the seas.

Neutral Ships Already In Use.

Therefore the only course left open to the administration in case the ship bill is passed seems to be the purchase of ships of other neutrals, like Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland and Italy. But these vessels, it is pointed out already, are in the carrying trade between the United States and [illegible] and their [illegible] would not add to the available tonnage for relieving the freight congestion alleged to exist.

To carry contraband of war, such as food stuffs or horses to England and France in a government owned ship would at once give Germany the right to charge the United States government with committing an unneutral and even an unfriendly act.

Robert Lansing, the present counsellor of the state department, discussed this phase of the matter before a subcommittee of the house naval committee some time ago.

Continuous Senate Session.

It is with the determination on the part of the Democratic senate leaders to hold the senate in continuous session until the ship bill is passed. The president's friends and supporters in the senate hope to achieve this result before adjournment Saturday night. There will be no cloture resorted to from present advices. The southern Democrats as a rule are opposed to it.

The Republicans are far from having exhausted their resources of oratory. Senator Burton and others among the [illegible] debaters are prepared to talk at length.

[illegible] says that with [illegible] beginning today the bill [illegible] to go through before the end of the week, certainly in ten days.

"The bill will never pass," said Senator Smoot, one of the Republican leaders. "It is dead."

BRITISH RETAKE LOST TRENCHES

Paris Reports Intense Cannonading on Long Front.

GERMANS MAKE MORE GAINS

Both Berlin and Petrograd Claim Repulse of Attacks by Other Side at Borjimow—Russians Say Battles in East Prussia Continue—Report German Losses Are Heavy.

Paris, Feb. 1.—The afternoon's official statement says: "The struggle during the day of the 30th was confined to artillery combats. The cannonading was very intense on one side or the other at numerous points. Our artillery has everywhere secured the advantage. Before La Basse the British army retook all the trenches which it momentarily lost. The Germans have cannonaded the belfry and church of Vanquevilliois (to the south of Arras). In the sections of Arras, Roye, Soissons, Rheims and Perthe our batteries have destroyed two of the enemy's pieces, several field works, a certain number of bomb throwers and dispersed several concentrations of troops, bivouacs and convoys. In the Argonne, in the woods of La Grueir, where our troops were obliged on the 29th to retreat slightly, as already reported, the Germans delivered near Fontaine Madame three new attacks which were repulsed. From the Argonne to the Vosges there has been no change. We hold, notably near Badonviller, the village of Angemont, which the Germans pretended to have occupied."

Germans Take Some Trenches.

Berlin, Feb. 1.—The following statement was issued at army headquarters:

"In Flanders there were artillery duels only.

"At Guinchy, south of the high road between La Bassee and Bethune and near Carency, northwest of Arras, the Germans took some French trenches.

"On the East Prussian frontier there were no events of importance.

"In Poland near Borjimow, to the east of Lodz, a Russian attack was repulsed."

Russ Repulse Attacks.

Petrograd, Feb. 1.—The Russian general staff gave out the following statement: "In the region of the forests north of Pillkallen and Gumbinnen (East Prussia) the battles continue. Here in the region of the village of Laugzalen, we repulsed the Germans by a counter attack with bayonets.

"On the left bank of the Vistula at the approaches to Borjimow the Germans during the night of Jan. 29 and the next day repeated their attacks upon our positions but were everywhere thrown back with great losses, except to one trench which remained in the hands of the enemy. In the region of the village of Jidomitse two German attempts to take the offensive during the day of the 29th failed.

"On the Carpathian front, in the region of Dukla and Wyszkow, the fighting is gradually assuming the character of a general battle. In this region the Austrians have concentrated [illegible] from some of their advanced [illegible], and from other fronts [illegible] to deliver an offensive [illegible] on the lower San, [illegible] across the [illegible] and Stry."

TWO OBSTACLES ARE BLOCKING 6 CENT LOAF

One Is Sherman Law; Otheer Is 5 Cent Loaf.

Chicago, Feb. 1.—Chicago may escape paying 6 cents for bread. At an executive meeting of the Chicago Master Bakers' association it developed that two snags are in the way of any organized attempt to raise the price of loaves.

One snag is the knowledge that one of the biggest baking concerns in Chicago has a large stock of flour on hand and is lying in wait for a raise by the smaller bakers in order to launch an advertising campaign to sell bread at the regular price of 5 and 10 cents a loaf. Such a course, it is thought, would result in putting the smaller bakers "in bad" with the rank and file of customers and divert their trade to the big fellows.

The second snag is the Sherman anti-trust act. The Chicago bakers in session said emphatically there could be no official collective action on their part for the reason that they feared they might put themselves under the ban of the law.

Watchman Thanked Once in Twenty Years' Vigil at Crossing.

Kokomo, Ind., Feb. 1.—J. H. Barnhart, who retired at 6 o'clock after having guarded one dangerous street crossing here for twenty years, says that during that time only one person ever thanked him for his vigilance on behalf of the public. That person was an old woman whom he helped across the street.

Barnhart was employed by the Lake Erie railroad to guard the crossing at Markland and Main streets, where two city car lines, two interurban lines and the Lake Erie and Pennsylvania tracks intersect.

CRAZED OVER LINE FENCES

Man Sent to Pontiac After Year of Continual Trouble.

Owosso, Mich., Feb. 1.—Hiram Whitman, thirty-five years old, unmarried and living at Perry, has been sent to the state asylum at Pontiac.

About eighteen months ago he and his brother Alonzo quarreled over property left them jointly by their mother and Hiram used a knife with disastrous effect on his brother, who, however, survived the attack. Alonzo sold his part of the property to Arthur Finch. Then Hiram destroyed fences and other property to show his displeasure at this action. Finch had him arrested on the charge of malicious destruction of property and the insanity proceedings followed.

MINES THREATENED WITH HELP FAMINE

Supply of Men Will Not Equal Demand in Copper Country.

Calumet, Mich., Feb. 1.—One big problem, the Lake Superior copper mining companies, are going to have to face when the market for copper metal is righted and moves steadily on its way, is the securing of a sufficient number of men for their mines and surface workings. Every mining company now has long lists of applicants for work and there are many men out of work, but the present over supply of men can not commence to take care of the demand, as it will be when conditions are brought back to normal or when there will come such a demand for copper, as it inevitably must come, that it will be found necessary to push production at every mine in the country.

DOUBLE TRAGEDY IMMINENT

Aged Man Falls Down Stairs; Believed Dying.

Owosso, Mich., Feb. 1.—Gilbert R. Lyon, seventy-nine years old, is believed to be dying at his home in this city as the result of falling down stairs. He was found unconscious on the cellar floor, his skull fractured. Mr. Lyon is the manager of the Oak Hill Cemetery association, the oldest alumnus of the University of Michigan in the county, and the oldest member of the Shiawassee county bar. He is well known in Democratic politics.

His wife, who is the same age, has been confined to her bed for several weeks with a fractured leg and there is some doubt whether she will ever be able to walk again.

Incognito

The Story of a Royal Marriage

By MAY C. ETHERIDGE

"I am tired," said Prince Adolf, "of having people gape at me whenever I appear."

"Your royal highness," said an equerry, entering, "a man has been brought to the palace by the police charged with personating you, the prince. He resembles you so closely that those who arrested him cannot be certain whether he is or is not an impostor. What orders shall I give as to his disposition?"

"Is he much like me?"

"So nearly that had he not been poorly dressed I, who am in constant attendance upon your highness, could not tell him from you."

"Bring him to me."

The equerry disappeared and in a few minutes entered, conducting the man in question. The prince started at the marvelous resemblance to himself.

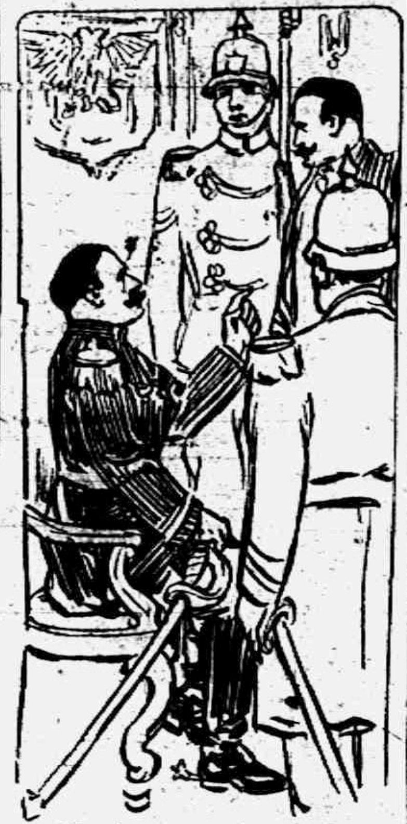
"Why have you personated me?" asked the prince.

"For fun, your highness."

"How would you like to personate me for a consideration?"

"I am at your royal highness' service."

The prince made a deal by which this man, Shuster, was to personate him till the moment he should meet his bride. The prince wished to do some shopping, and it was arranged that, dressed as a commoner and with his hat pulled down over his eyes, he should enter a store by one door while Shuster, as the true prince, should enter by another.



"HOW WOULD YOU LIKE TO PERSONATE ME?"

So the next morning at the usual hour of the prince's going forth Shuster was driven through the usual crowd of loiterers at the palace gate, all of whom took off their hats, the salute being gracefully acknowledged by Shuster. The prince, looking down from an upper window, saw the exit.

Leaving the palace by a rear exit, the prince took a shorter route to the first shop he intended to visit and reached it just in time to see his spurious self alight from his carriage, the footman open the door and Shuster pass through a small gathering who, recognizing the prince's livery, had run to the spot to catch a glimpse of him. Then the prince did his shopping in another part of the store, though he found it difficult to secure attention, so eager were the clerks to see his royal highness.

The prince was much relieved and pleased at being able to buy a pair of stockings or a necktie without having a crowd about him, kept back in some instances by the police. He wrote his fiancee of his ruse and that he would arrive incognito, his personator coming in state. The princess was caught by the device and wished that she might herself be personated in the same way. She at once sent her favorite attendant out to search for a young woman who resembled her. The woman spent a week on the street, in shops, at evening entertainments, and at last found a young lady who sufficiently resembled her mistress to warrant an attempt to pass her for the princess. The lady was commanded to go to the palace. She expressed some surprise and at first refused, but changed her mind.

When the princess saw the person who was to represent her she was much pleased, not so much at the resemblance as the carriage, for the lady had the bearing of one of high degree. Some difficulty was met with to induce her to act the part of princess, but at last she consented and began her official duties in personating the princess on a shopping tour, as Shuster had personated the prince.

The marriage between Prince Adolf and the Princess Wilhelmina was a state marriage and had nothing to do with love. Indeed, the two had met but once—when the marriage contract was signed. But this made but little difference so far as the prince's arrival and the wedding were concerned. According to the arrangements, when a carriage drove up to the palace where dwelt the princess amid salvos of artillery he was received by the princess' personator, the princess herself standing back and enjoying the farce that was being enacted.

"What a joke it would be," she said to herself, "if these two could be brought to marry, each thinking the other to be of princely blood! As soon as the prince arrives I shall propose the plan to him."

She did propose the plan when her fiance arrived the same evening and was admitted through a rear door of the palace. The prince was evidently much struck with the proposal and said he would think it over. He expressed a desire to see his man, Shuster, with a view to giving him further instructions, and the representative was introduced to his apartments. What passed between them was not known, but after the meeting the prince told the princess that he had proposed her plan to Shuster.

It had been arranged that the nuptial festivities should last a week, then the wedding, after which there should be another week of rejoicing. The princess was much interested in her matchmaking between the two representatives and was quite pleased to find every evidence that the two had been violently smitten with each other. The prince and his representative had conferences occasionally, and the former reported to the princess that the latter had agreed to her plan of passing through the ceremony of marriage with her who was enacting the part of bride expectant, though he feared to get into trouble by marrying a princess while pretending to be a prince. But Adolf declared that he would make that all right, assuring the man of his personal protection.

The conspirators could not, of course, go so far as to have a public marriage celebrated between the two, so it was arranged that Shuster and the princess' representative should be married privately—that is, if the spurious princess would consent to the match. The day before the royal marriage was celebrated Shuster announced that he had won the lady's consent, and the prince and his fiancee agreed that the marriage should be celebrated that same evening in the private chapel of the palace.

A few of those most intimate with the princess were admitted to the secret and to the ceremony. All watched the proceedings with great gusto. Nothing could be more interesting than a marriage between two commoners, each thinking the other to be of royal blood. Many comments were passed on the pair, the most frequent of which was that, though commoners, each possessed the carriage and dignity of a person of the blood royal.

The groom had stipulated that immediately after the ceremony he should take his bride whither so ever he pleased and no questions asked. So when the pair had been congratulated they stepped into one of the royal carriages and were driven away.

That night the prince disappeared. On the dresser in his apartments was found a note stating that his name was Herman Shuster. He had personated the prince till just before his arrival at the capital, when his royal highness had suddenly decided to enter in his own propria persona. He whom the princess had taken for a dummy was the real prince. He had fallen in love with the princess' representative and married her.

The princess, astonished, mortified, gave orders to cease the preparations for the wedding that was to take place that day at high noon and shut herself up in the palace. There was but one matter of comfort for her—if her betrothed had jilted her he had married a commoner. This would insure innumerable troubles for him in the future and might cost him a crown.

But within a few days strange news came from a neighboring kingdom. The king of this country had recently died and left the throne to his daughter. The young queen was much beloved by her subjects, being given to charity. She was used to going among the poor and the institutions for the poor incognita for the purpose of studying the needs of the former and correcting abuses in the latter. She had found these incognitas so pleasant, relieving her, as they did, from the gaze of curious crowds, that she had adopted them when traveling. In one of her journeys she had been summoned to the palace of the reigning sovereign and had been assigned a duty by the princess royal, the latter thinking her to be a commoner. While in the palace she had happened to meet the heir apparent of another kingdom, a love affair had resulted and the queen had been privately married.

When the princess heard this news she was more astonished than before. What an imposition had been practiced upon her and what an extraordinary coincidence, the queen and the prince meeting under such circumstances! But what excited the wrath of her father, the king, was that two kingdoms being near his own would now be united under one sovereign, the two together being far stronger than he was himself.

Soon after his marriage Prince Adolf sent a deputation to the lady to whom he had been betrothed to offer an humble apology. They said that after informing her that he would be represented by another he had been seized with a desire to win her love in that way, but her adoption of a similar plan as his own had placed him under an influence that he had been unable to resist.

Cake Baking Hints.

If the cake rises rapidly in the middle like a pyramid and cracks it is cooking too quickly. A well cooked cake should be flat on top when done.

Cake tins, patty pans, etc., are easily cleaned by boiling. Put them in a saucepan with some soap powder and water, boil them for about an hour and they will be found clean and new looking. Soap and soda or borax may be used instead of soap powder if preferred.

Delicious Blanc Mange.

To make chocolate blanc mange take two teaspoonfuls of cocoa in a basin and mix with half a pint of boiling milk; stir well. Then mix two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with half a pint of cold milk. Put all in a saucepan and bring to the boil. Stir well and let boil for half a minute.

Making Barley Water.

To make barley water take three teaspoonfuls of pearl barley and wash in several waters until quite clean. Add one and one-half pint of cold water, boil down to one pint; then strain. Barley water must be freshly made every day. When patent barley is used it can be made in twenty minutes.

Baking a Pudding.

When baking a pudding always place the baking dish within a stew pan or larger baking dish half full of water. You will then have no burned edges, no hard crusts and consequently no waste, and it will be infinitely easier to wash the baking dish.

Opportunity.

Opportunity has hair in front; behind she is bald. If you seize her by the forelock you may hold her, but if suffered to escape not Jupiter himself can capture her again.—Latin Proverb.

Helping the Enemy.

A coal heaver was getting in a load of coal in the suburbs of London. He was shoveling in the coal at a good rate when he was startled by a terrific yell from the house adjoining.

"Wot the dickens is the matter?" queried the coal man, starting up.

"Matter, you thickhead!" shouted the man, frantically endeavoring to pull his hair up in clots by the roots. "You are putting the coal down the wrong hole. My wife's people live there!"—London Tit-Bits.

CLASS PARTIES.

Thursday evening was a momentous evening for the Juniors of the T. H. S. because the long expected sleigh ride to Winnifred Mitchell's home took place. The air was cold but that did not spoil the fun and at an early hour the Juniors crept to bed tired but happy.

The [illegible] ventured out to the Boyce home Wednesday evening but on account of the peculiar disposition of their noble steeds, their journey was somewhat jerky. Nevertheless the expressions on their youthful faces the next morning made manifest the fact that their evening had been a merry one.

Reports in Junior English class have been a daily occurence in the last few days. Preparatory to the study of Shakespeare's "Julius Caesar" appropriate subjects have been discussed by different members of the class, viz., Lives of Caesar, Queen Elizabeth and Shakespeare; Stratford-on-Avon; Elizabethan Plays; Lupercalia; London in time of Shakespeare and Rome in time of Caesar.

The mathematicians of our school were overjoyed to commence the study of Geometry the first of the week.

Those interested in the French language assemble three times a week to acquaint themselves with a few French phrases.

"IN THE VANGUARD"

Following the suggestion of the National Department of Education, the much discussed peace play "In the Vanguard" has this week been read to the students of T. H. S. "In the Vanguard", a play of unusual significance, is the work of an American woman, Katrina Trask. Its production this season in the larger American cities has attracted widespread attention and educators and peace-advocates everywhere have sought to give it wide publicity. The play has been presented at numerous assemblages of teachers and public workers, who have been urged to carry its lesson farther. The public has received it with serious consideration and it appears destined to rank high among the literary productions of recent years.

Sterlopticon lectures have been delivered to attentive audiences of Botany and English students this week.

A movement is afoot among the High School students to establish a fund for a rest room for those who find it impossible to dispense with their afternoon siesta. The following munificent contributions have been received by the committee:

"Skinny"	$.09
"Curly"	$.99
Barlow Wood (borrowed)	$9.99
Caesar Class	$99.99

N. B. Those interested in adding furniture for tete-tete purposes may interview the committee in charge.

The Virgil class has been making metrical translation of their work. The following has been selected as an example of the work being done.

O'erhead hangs an ominous cloud,
Which, bearing the storm and the night,
Envelopes the waves in a shroud,
While the wind rolls the sea with its might.

Great billows begin to arise!
We are tossed about in the spray,
Clouds are enshrouding the sky
Damp darkness o'ertakes the day.

The poles are booming with thunder,
The lightning is flashing in chains,
The fire rends the clouds all asunder.
In voluminous torrents, it rains.

From our course we are driven away
And we wander blind o'er the sea.
We cannot tell night from the day,
Nor steer in the wind ruffled lee.

The third day, we are still in the night,
Without e'en the light of a star,
But the fourth—land comes to our sight
And mountains are rising afar.

AN ASSEMBLY ROOM SOLILOQUY

(Written with apologies to Shakespeare)

To freeze or not to freeze—that is the question;
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The drafts and breezes of a cold assembly room,
Or to rise up and turn on the heat,
And by doing so, roast? To roast—to burn—
And by roasting, say we end
The aches and the thousand other things
That a cold brings with it. 'Tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished for.
To roast! Perchance to smother—aye, there's the rub.
To roast and smother in the hottest of rooms,
But that the dread of something after smothering—
That dreaded state from which no traveler returns—
Puzzles the mind.
And makes us rather bear these chills we have
Than to fly to torrid blasts we know not of?
Thus doth the Thermometer make cowards of us all.

CONUNDRUMS

Why is Leon McLea[illegible] so fond of the song, "Bobbing Up and Down"? Because he does continually rise and sat.

Why are fire drills so frequent in the T. H. S.? Because, since 'tis impossible to ventilate the building, we ventilate the pupils. As the immortal bard barked "Logic is logic."

Why is the T. H. S. like a bakery? Because you see in it so many French rolls.

A reward of ten cents will be awarded to the person who sends in the best answer to the following:

Why does the guardian angel of T. H. S. wear rubber heels?

WITH [illegible]

The latest in history.

Miss Halliday, to her Ancient History class: "If you stay up late enough, some of these nights, I think you will be able to see the comet."

Mr. Davidson, excitedly, "Wal, I sat up 'til eight o'clock the other night and didn't see it then."

Teacher: "What were our inheritances from pre-historic man?" (Correct answer: Domestic animals, use of fire, wheat, barley and rice and language.)

Pupil: "Sun, moon and stars."

FAMOUS SAYINGS OF OUR FACULTY

"Bring pencil and paper to class!"

"There will be an eighth period, to night."

"There's too much noise in the room."

"Sein Sie nicht so aus Holz gemacht!"

"The Freshmen we don't expect to behave, because they don't know enough. Neither do we expect the Seniors to behave, because they know too much. However, we expect good behavior from the Sophomores and Juniors."

'Twas to that particularly bright Junior class, German I, that the impossibility of declining the article 'ein' in the plural, was being explained.

"You can see," explained Miss Harris, "how ridiculously absurd it sounds to say 'a books,' 'a desks' or 'a boys.' But—What is the matter, Gordon?" she demanded of an unfortunate tittering youth.

"Well, you can use 'a' with some plural nouns," he announced, "'Cause you can say 'A-men.'"

ALSO IN GERMAN II

Als dann das Glück kam, war er dem Grabe nahe—

Student (translating) "When luck came, he grabbed it."

When she could stand Mr. Woods chattering no longer, our highly revered teacher exclaimed, "Is that the woods I hear murmuring again?"

According to the appropriate salutation which headed most of the Latin II exam. papers, the Caesar class ought to be in mourning. The sad news was conveyed to their teacher, thus: "Nos morituri te salutamus."

MISS FEATHERWEIGHT'S QUESTION BUREAU

Dear Miss Featherweight: I am a teacher in the T. H. S. refrigerator and have charge of a bunch of paper strewing youngsters. Would it be an affront to ask the school board to add janitor's wages to my already munificent salary. Thanking you in advance for your advice, I remain

"G. E. H."
We understand that there are many vacuum cleaners in T. H. S. (Editors note; this joke is explained below.)

Dear Miss Featherweight: I am fifteen and extremely in love with a certain young lady. I sit opposite her in school and she blushes every time she looks at me. Do you think its because she loves me? Do you think its because she loves me? How can I keep from gazing at her? "Pat."

"Pat:" Probably its because your soul shines in your eyes when you gaze on her countenance and not because she loves you. Try wearing blinders.

(Explanation of Answer I: There are many among the Freshmen whose cerebral [illegible] might be [illegible] represented by a "o", therefore a vacuum; employ them as cleaners, hence "vacuum cleaners.")

There is a bad fellow called Mac
Who delights in biting one's back;
But some of these days
He'll meet one o' those "jays"
Who return all such bangs with a whack!

I know a young fellow called "Chuck"
Who eats most all kinds of "truck,"
But it once reached the limit,
Said Charlie, "Oh dim-it!"
When of very bad peanuts he "partuck" (partook)

Pretty Absentminded.

A book about George Canning and his friends contains among its anecdotes two which deal with Hookham Frere and the absentmindedness for which he was noted. Frere married Lady Errol, and "while they were engaged he took her in to supper at a ball. While they were talking he drank up the glass of wine he had poured out for her and then took her back supperless to the ballroom. After the wedding he went straight from the church to Mr. Murray, the publisher, who asked him to stay to dinner, to which he very nearly agreed, remembering only just in time that Lady Errol was waiting to start on the honeymoon."

How to Soften Hard Water With Common Soda.

A simple method to soften hard water is to boil it for a quarter of an hour, pour it into an earthen jug, add a quarter of an ounce of common soda to each two gallons, stir, and when cold carefully pour off the clear water from the sediment.

A "Hide" of Land.

A definition of the hide of land has been found in a fifteenth century manuscript in the Bodleian library at Oxford. It reads: "Nota, for the mesure and mete Lande. It ys to wete that iii. Barly Cornys in the myddis of the Ere makyth one ynche. And xii Enchis makyth one foote; And sixteyne foote and a halfe makyth a perche; and in sum contre a perche is xviii. foote. Fourty perchys in lengyth makyth a frode of lande; put iiii thereto in breede, and that makyth an Acre. And xiiii. Acrys makyth an hyde of lande, which ys lxx. Acrys. And vii. hydis makyth a Knyghtis fee, which ys vC.ix. Acrys of lande."

One Answer Too Many.

A coal dealer asked some law students if they could guess what legal authority was the favorite of his trade. One answered "Coke." "Right," said the coal dealer. Another suggested "Blackstone." "Good too!" said the questioner. Then another said "Littleton"—and the coal dealer was annoyed.

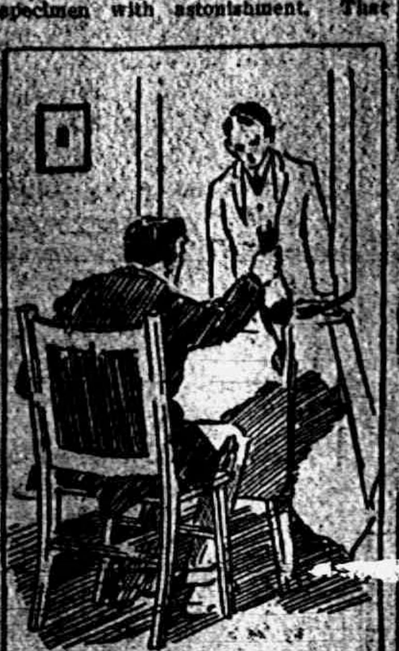
A VERY QUEER BIRD.

The One Young Mark Twain Sprung Upon the Scientists.

Mark Twain's father was an ornithologist. He had several friends who were also enthusiasts on the subject of birds. Whenever any one of them discovered a rara avis it was the custom to have a consultation. Mark had been a witness of several of these bird inquests and had noted the delight the old men took in discussing a new found specimen. One day it occurred to him to provide the Hannibal ornithologists with a real circus in the form of a bird. He killed a crow and also a barnyard rooster. Plucking out the tail feathers of both the crow and the rooster, he substituted the rooster's tail feathers for those of the crow, producing a unique effect. When he had the specimen nicely prepared he went to his father and, handing it to him, said:

"Here, father, is a very curious bird I shot. I thought you would be interested in it."

The old gentleman gazed upon the specimen with astonishment. That evening the ornithologists of Hannibal were assembled in Mr. Clemens' parlor. The rare specimen was put before them. The discussion was long and learned. The opinions expressed were various. One thought the bird was an offshoot of the bird of paradise family; others had equally ridiculous notions as to its ancestry. But there was one who refused to be swerved by the peculiarity of the bird's tail from the judgment that it was of the crow family.



"WHY, JUST LOOK HERE," HE SAID.

"Why, just look here," he said, lifting the bird by its tail feathers. He got no further. The feathers came out. There was a quick closing of a door and Mr. Clemens started to leave the room.

"Gentlemen," he said, "please excuse me a few moments. I will see Samuel first and explain later."

Clearing the Atmosphere.

In his capacity of dramatic critic Mr. J. Comyns Carr, the author, wrote a notice of the play of "Charles I." in which Irving played under the management of Mr. Bateman. His criticism deeply incensed the manager. In order perhaps to find the opportunity of informing the critic of his disapproval, the manager invited him to a supper at the Westminster club on the second or third night of the production. When he thought the fitting moment had arrived Mr. Bateman led the conversation to the point at issue and, emphatically banging the table with his fist, declared in the loudest of tones that he did not produce his plays at the Lyceum theater to please Mr. Comyns Carr. There was a moment's awkward silence, which Mr. Carr confesses he did not feel quite able to break, but which was released by a wit of the company with the happy retort, "Well, dear boy, then you can't be surprised if they don't please him."

THIS busy, progressive nation is today at the dawn of a new era of commercial and social development. The means by which the human voice, with its slightest inflections and individuality of personality, can be carried across the continent instantly, have been provided. Talking by telephone from New York to San Francisco is now an accomplished fact.

The celebration of this latest and greatest triumph in the art of telephony has just taken place. Within a short time the public will have, ready for its use, the product of American brains, American initiative and American scientific and technical skill, a transcontinental telephone service, the equal of which is not even approached in all the other nations of the world.

It is a splendid scientific achievement of the very highest character. The power that sends the human voice out over the telephone is scarcely greater than that of a breath, yet the means have been provided by which this tiny, almost imaginary impulse, made up of as many as 2,000 separate vibrations a second, can be picked up by a delicate instrument, conserved over a distance of 3,400 miles, and reproduced perfectly and instantly across the continent. The human voice has been made to travel as fast as light, faster than sound unaided by technical apparatus! Indeed, it rivals THOUGHT even, in the swiftness of its flight.

The imagination can but feebly grasp, much less attempt to describe, the far-reaching significance of such a tremendous accomplishment. One hundred million people will have for their daily use a system of communication that knows no East, no West, no North, no South. Dialects, provincialisms, sectional prejudices, must eventually yield to the closer union, the better understanding, the more intimate comradeship that the human voice establishes. The neighborliness of a whole nation is advanced by the brushing away of the physical restraints of centuries.

This contribution to the future happiness and prosperity of a more closely united people has not been brought about, however, by the overcoming of a few isolated, concrete difficulties. Its success has depended upon the exercise of the highest engineering and technical skill and the solution was found only in the cumulative effect of improvements great and small, in telephone, transmitter, line, cable, switchboard, and every other piece of apparatus or plant required in the transmission of speech.

In this work the experimental and research department of the Bell System of which this Company is a part, has been engaged ever since the telephone became a commercial possibility, less than 40 years ago. With no traditions to follow and no experience to guide, this department, which is now directed by a staff of over 550 engineers and scientists, including former professors, post graduate students, scientific investigators—the graduates of 140 universities—has created an entirely new art—the art of telephony, and has given to the people of this country a telephone service that has no equal.

It has required vast expenditures of money and immense concentration of effort, but these have been justified by results of immeasurable benefit to the public. The transcontinental telephone line, 3,400 miles long, joining the Atlantic and Pacific, is part of the Bell System of 21,000,000 miles of wire connecting 9,000,000 telephone stations, located everywhere throughout the United States. Composing this system are the American Telephone and Telegraph Company and Associated Companies and connecting companies, giving universal service to 100,000,000 people.

"IN THE VANGUARD"

The lecture by Dr. Thornton Anthony Mills, Friday evening under the auspices of the Monday Club, was greeted by a good audience. The young ladies of the Club acted as ushers.

Mrs. J. D. Shull, president of the Club in behalf of the ladies, welcomed the speaker and introduced him to the audience and the male quartette, W. S. and Fred Dickinson, Floyd Ager and Floyd Juckett, rendered a very fine selection.

Dr. Mills gave a most interesting review of the play "In the Vanguard," and as the story unfolded the interest of the audience increased.

It was the story of the young soldier who rebelled against the cruelty of war and who, after trying to render aid to a dying foe, was convinced that war was not the way to settle difficulties. He would no longer carry his gun, but bore the colors instead. He was branded as a craven and coward on his return home and suffered the taunts of his former friends, even his sweetheart not being willing to meet him. But in the end he triumphed over all and his friends saw him more in the light of a hero in acting up to his convictions against the horrors of war. The trend of the story was to prove that war was not necessary and that it is little less than murder to shoot down your fellow man.

Dr. Mills told the story in such convincing language that one could see each character as it was presented and followed their history to the end.

The quartette gave a second number at the close of the lecture.

The ladies of the club are certainly to be commended on their selection of a speaker and have the thanks of the public for this fine entertainment.

A sober talk reduced him to tears and a promise to do better hereafter.

U. S. STEEL PENSION FUND

The United States Steel & Carnegie Pension Fund is maintained by the United States Steel Corporation and the Carnegie Relief Fund, there being no tax or assessment of any kind against the wages of the employees.

Pensions are computed as follows:-

For each year of service the employe receives one per cent of his average monthly pay during the last ten years of service. For exemple: An employe who has been thirty years in the service and has received an average monthly pay of $80.00 during the last ten years, would receive a pension of $24.90 per month. No pension is less than $12.00 or more than $100.00 per month.

All male employes who have been in the service twenty years or longer and are sixty years or more of age are eligible for pension; women being eligible at the age of fifty years.

Beneficiaries, summary of Pension cases. Active January 1, 1914, 2092 added during 1914, 612; total 2704; discontinued during 1914, 183; Continued beyond December 31, 1914, 2521. Averages for the cases added during 1914: Age, 63.33 years; service, 28.76 years; monthly pension, $20.40.

The Anthony Works in Tecumseh is a branch of the American Steel and Wire Co, which is controlled by the U. S. Steel Corporation and its employes are eligible for pensions under the above plan.

The Anthony plant was first organ in Tecumseh and commenced business in December 1901 and was sold to the American Steel & Wire Co. in July 1910. Several employes have been with the Anthony Works 10 or twelve years and will still have to work from 8 to 10 years before they become eligible for pensions.

JOHN W. VOGEL'S BIG CITY MINSTRELS

John W. Vogel's Big City Minstrels will be seen at the Bradley opera house next Tuesday, February 9. The company is half a hundred strong and boasts of a roster second to none. Manager Vogel's reputation for being a standard bearer is enough to satisfy us that the performance will be in keeping with the heralding. The radium palace, a new and very elaborate first part setting, will be presented here for the first time, and it is said to be the most beautiful and costly affair ever used by any theatrical company in this or any other country.

An occasional visit of a minstrel show is a good thing for the theatre goer. Wearied by a continuous course of problem plays, lurid melodramas and musical comedies, the stately presence and sparkling conversation of the interlocutor appeals restfully to him, while the familiar quips of the end men are hailed as old friends returning from a long journey, and it is all very lovely. This statement is especially true of as good a minstrel show as John W. Vogel's Big City Minstrels are presenting.

There is just enough newness about it to please, and just enough of the old-time flavor to relieve it from any charge of iconoclasm. And the fact that the past twelve years, demonstrated enthusiastic approval of every item of the bill, would indicate that John W. Vogel's aggregation has made good.

The scenery and stage settings used in John W. Vogel's Big City Minstrels are said to be the most elaborate and expensive ever used for a similar purpose; the setting is called the Radium Palace, a befitting title, because of the appropriate costumes, and the numerous and powerful calcium and electrical effects used thereon. This is the only setting of the kind in use by a minstrel organization as the cost of same prohibits the average manager from investing the amount of capital required. The Vogel company travel in their own special car and also carry a carload of special scenery and effects.

Good Form

For St. Valentine's Functions.

The heart is the accepted symbol for St. Valentine's day, and place cards for the dinner or luncheon table cut out of red or white paper in this shape can be easily decorated.

The pairing off of dinner companions on this evening is easily done if the names of famous lovers of history are borrowed to help you in a modern placing of guests or members of the family. By writing or printing the names on cards a very easy arrangement is possible.

Romeo and Juliet, Dante and Beatrice, Petrarch and Laura, Antony and Cleopatra, Darby and Joan, Sleeping Beauty and Prince Charming are some suggestions for pairing.

The woman's name should be placed on one card, the man's name on another, and the two lovers should seat themselves in adjoining chairs at the table.

Little Cupids form a very important part of the decoration. Their artistic arrows and forgetmenots are also good to use as decorative accessories. These can be drawn or painted, and if traced from tissue paper [illegible] wax tracing paper can be done with satisfaction and quickness.

Verses from the poets found in any collection of poetical quotations will help you in a further appropriate decoration of place cards.

For Spring Holidays.

Such bewildering assortments of place cards, favors and table decorations are to be found in the shops that the hostess need not lack for suggestions along these lines. Flags, of course, predominate as a decoration for the Lincoln day as well as the Washington birthday celebrations, while the crimson heart holds its own as a suggestion for St. Valentine's day, and nothing yet has been discovered which can take the place of the shamrock and harp as typical of St. Patrick's day.

For the hostess, however, who is striving to find something original one would suggest as a centerpiece for the Lincoln day table a huge bunch of cotton dolls, which are in themselves very dainty and pretty and suggestive of the southland. The whole plan of decoration may be carried out along these lines, using miniature colored dolls, log cabins, banjos, etc.

Then a menu card might be arranged naming the different dishes after the battles of the civil war.

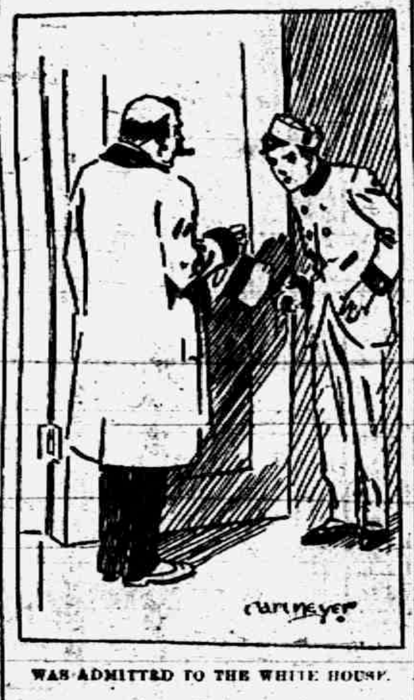
Learn to Laugh.

The man who cannot laugh is not only fit for treason, stratagem and spoils, but his whole life is already a treason and a stratagem.—Carlyle.

Just an Informal Call.

One Captain Shibles sailed from Thomaston with a cargo of lime, but found a dull market in Chesapeake bay. "I know what I'll do," said Captain Simeon Shibles to himself. "I'll put on my best clothes and go up to Washington and see President Andrew Jackson." The captain did so, was admitted to the White House and, with his "plug hat" under his arm, thus delivered himself: "President Andrew Jackson, Esq., I have called to pay my respects to a man I admire and to say that I shall continue to vote for you as long as you live. And, not to take up any more of your valuable time, I want to ask if you have any use in your business or in the business of the United States for a cargo of Maine lime." The president bought it for the navy yard.



WAS ADMITTED TO THE WHITE HOUSE.

Her Preference.

Marie Caslova, the violinist, tells of a reception at which she was to be the soloist, which was given by a woman whose sudden wealth had not brought her musical knowledge. "When I called her up five hours before the reception to ask about the condition of the piano she exclaimed: 'I sent the piano back to the factory last week for repairs. Can't you play something without one?'

"The only things I had at my fingers' ends for violin alone were some Bach sonatas. This gave me an inspiration. 'Certainly,' I answered. 'I can play the Chaconne.'

"After a moment's silence a disappointed voice replied, 'But, my dear, I would so much rather you played the violin.'"

A Different Reason.

"What bright eyes you have!" said the visitor to five-year-old Tommy. "You must get plenty of sleep."

"Yes'm," he answered. "My mamma makes me go to bed every night at 8 o'clock."

"That's to keep you healthy," said the visitor.

"No, it ain't," replied the youngster. "It's so she can mend my clothes."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

KITCHEN ECONOMY.

How to Construct a Homemade Fireless Cooker.

Materials needed for cooker: Galvanized iron can No. 3, with cover, amount 78 cents; sawdust, about 10 cents; two yards of denim, about 38 cents; covered agate pail (to be used as cooking pail), about 20 cents; total, $1.46.

(It is not necessary to use denim. You can use an old tablecloth, muslin, canton flannel or any old wool material you happen to have on hand.)

Method: Place loose sawdust in the bottom of the can to a depth of about eight inches. Fold the two yards of denim or other material lengthwise and make a long bag. This bag when empty should be about two inches deeper than the cooking pail. Fill the bag with sawdust, lay the bag flat on the table and spread the sawdust evenly. When filled with sawdust the bag should be a little deeper than the cooking pail. Then roll the bag around the cooking pail so that a smooth, firm nest is formed when the bag is placed upright in the can on top of the sawdust. From the remaining denim or other material make a round, flat bag (material will have to be pieced for this). Fill the bag with sawdust and use it on top of the cooking pail. The bags must be made and fitted into the can in such a way that there will be no open space whatever between the sides of the cooking pail and the can or between the top of the cooking pail and the cover of the can, through which heat can escape.

How to Set the Color In Colored Materials.

Now is the time when the "forehanded" woman is getting some of her sewing done. Before making up the colored wash materials she shrinks them and "sets" the colors.

Green and lavender materials will retain their coloring, unhurt, by laundry work, if they are soaked first fifteen minutes in about two gallons of cold water to which a cupful of strong vinegar has been added. Salted water or water to which turpentine has been added will set pinks and blues. Colored silk stockings may be successfully washed by following the same rules.

How to Clean the Bathtub With Crumpled Newspapers.

By rubbing the bathtub with crumpled newspaper as soon as it is thoroughly dry every bit of grease, soap, lint and the marks from the water will be easily and quickly removed. It is not necessary to do any scouring if the tub is smooth, but it is quite necessary that it be dry.

WHISTLER AND HIS GROCER.

An Overdue Bill, a Threat and a Payment Not In Cash.

Whistler's financial affairs were the mingled joy and terror of his friends, and the Pennells, in their "Life of Whistler," give a most amusing glimpse into this side of his life. On one occasion he had actually run up a bill of £600 with a Chelsea greengrocer, who at last called to insist upon payment. Whistler came out strong on that occasion:

"How—what—why—why, of course, you have sent these things most excellent things—and they have been eaten, you know, by most excellent people. Think what a splendid advertisement! And sometimes, you know the salads are not quite up to the mark—the fruit, you know, not quite fresh. And if you go into these unseemly discussions about the bill—well, you know, I shall have to go into discussion about all this, and think how it would hurt your reputation with all these extraordinary people. I think the best thing is not to refer to the past—I'll let it go. And in the future we'll have a weekly account—wiser, you know!"

A Calamity.

"One morning when we were a week old the nurse was bathing us, and she took the blue ribbon off Della's wrist and the pink ribbon off Stella's wrist. When she was ready to put them on again she could not remember which one of us was Della and which was Stella, so she took us in to mother, but mother could not tell either, and no one ever did know whether or not we had our right names. Then when we were seven years old one of us died, and nobody knows whether it was Della or Stella."

Little Tot burst into an agony of tears and sobbed out, "I just know it was my own mother that died when she was seven years old!"—Youth's Companion.

A Rhineland Legend.

There is a Rhineland legend of three German robbers who, having acquired by various atrocities what amounted to a very valuable booty, agreed to divide the spoil and to retire from so dangerous a vocation. When the day appointed for this purpose arrived one of them was dispatched to a neighboring town to purchase provisions for their last carousal. The other two secretly agreed to murder him on his return that they might divide his share between them. They did so. But the murdered man was a closer calculator even than his assassins, for he had previously poisoned a part of the provisions, that he might appropriate to himself the whole of the spoil. This precious triumvirate were found dead together.

MORE STRENGTH FOR OLD PEOPLE

Mrs. Hutchison—Eighty-One Years Old—Uses No Other Tonic but Vinol and Recommends It to Friends.

Greenville, S.C.—"It is with pleasure I tell others of the great benefit I have derived from Vinol, for the past several years. I am 81 years old and I find Vinol gives me strength, a healthy appetite and overcomes nervous disorders. Vinol is the only tonic reconstructor I have used for several years. I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and it has always proved satisfactory."—Mrs. M. A. HUTCHISON, Greenville, S. C.

Such cases as the above are constantly coming to our attention. If people in this vicinity only realized how Vinol invigorates old people we would not be able to supply the demand.

It is the tissue building, curative elements of the cod's livers, aided by the blood making strengthening properties of tonic iron contained in Vinol, that makes it so successful in building up strength for old people, delicate children and for all run-down conditions. Vinol is also a most successful remedy for chronic coughs, colds and bronchitis. If it fails to benefit any one who tries it we return your money.

The Man In Seedy Clothes

How a Famous Gambling Resort Came to Be Discontinued

By F. A. MITCHEL

Half a century ago the celebrated gambling house at Monte Carlo did not exist. At that time Baden Baden was the center of attraction for those who wished to "buck the tiger." The building devoted to the purpose was not as splendid as that now at Monte Carlo, but it was a handsome one for those times.

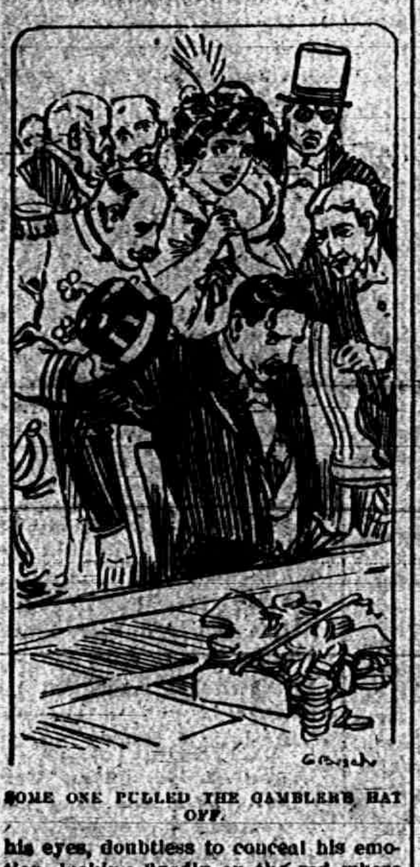
One night a man of mean appearance entered the spacious gambling hall at Baden Baden, shambled up to the table and stood behind those inclosing it looking at the game. His eyesight seemed to be sensitive, for he wore colored glasses. His clothing was shabby, and his appearance was by no means improved by his beard, which was long and scraggly.

After watching the game for awhile he pushed his way to a seat beside the table that had been left vacant by a woman who had lost all her money and had nothing for a stake. On the stranger's left was a German baron, who, looking aside at his new neighbor and not relishing the proximity of such a looking man, gathered up the coins before him and withdrew.

The seedy individual drew from his pocket a purse, from which he took a few gold pieces and distributed them over the numbers he wished to cover. The wheel was spun, the ball rattled about in the inclosure, and the croupier announced what had won and what had lost. The stranger was ahead on his bets. The next time he lost, and next won and continued to win and lose, his winnings usually equaling his losses.

At the table directly opposite the newcomer sat a young man, whom a number of the players recognized as a member of the ducal court. He was known to be talented and a favorite with his sovereign. Much of his time was spent at the gaming table, and report said that a splendid estate he possessed was gradually being transferred to others through the roulette table. On this occasion he was playing feverishly, risking large sums and usually losing.

At last he had nothing more to lose and sat with his hat drawn down over his eyes, doubtless to conceal his emotion, looking fixedly on the red where he had lost his last stake.



SOME ONE PULLED THE GAMBLER'S HAT OFF.

At the moment a handsomely dressed woman entered the hall with a hasty step and approached the table evidently looking for some one. Seeing the nobleman, she went to him, stood behind him and was about to lay a hand on his shoulder when the seedy individual opposite pushed a handful of gold pieces in front of his vis-a-vis. Whether the latter did not understand that an offer of a loan had been made him or whether he declined to accept a favor from one of such disreputable appearance none could tell. But he continued to gaze as before on the red, making no motion to use the proffered coins. Then the man who had made the offer partly rose, reached across the table and placed the money he had offered on a spot where if it won it would win 5 to 1.

This incident held the hand of the lady behind the nobleman, and instead of letting it fall where she had intended she waited. The wheel was spun, the ball rattled, and, being at last caught in one of the receptacles, the croupier announced the result. A dozen gold pieces that the seedy man had placed for his vis-a-vis were covered by sixty pieces of the same denomination.

All eyes were fixed on the winner to see what he would do. Would he accept his winnings? If so would he repay the loan? Would he replace his new stake? Would he leave the whole amount where it [illegible]

He answered these questions by doing nothing. He made no motion. His hat concealed the upper part of his face so that no one could see what it expressed. Since he did not withdraw his winnings it was assumed that he would leave them where they were. If he lost he would lose the whole amount; if he won he would win five times the sixty or 300 gold pieces.

The direction "Make your bets" was given, and the wheel was twirled.

By this time those about the table had largely lost interest in their own bets in the more absorbing diversion of watching this reckless player, who seemed resolved to risk all on one turn of the wheel. The ball rattled louder than ever in the surrounding silence. The hush continued till the croupier announced that the 5 to 1 bet had won again, then burst forth a din of exclamations.

The only impassive person at the table was the winner. He made no sign of excitement, did not extend a hand toward the gold that was poured on to the table for him to take up. The seedy man who was the cause of all this good fortune had ceased to bet, being apparently intent upon the person he had befriended. But his features, too, were concealed, the principal one, his eyes, being covered by colored glasses.

The exclamations of the onlookers were succeeded by another hush. Could it be possible that the winner would leave what now amounted to nearly $2,000 of our money where it was, taking the chances again of losing all or winning five times the amount? The silence was broken by a soft voice coming from the woman standing behind the object of all this interest.

"Carl, hadn't you better take up some of your winnings?"

There was no reply—at least none was heard, for at that moment the ball rattled again.

For the third time the five to one won.

What was before mingled exclamations was now a hubbub. The heap of coins would be too large for the spot covered, and an I O U was laid on the pile. The seedy man sat stolidly looking at the man for whom he had rendered possible these winnings, but he made no protest against tempting fate further.

"Oh, Carl!" cried the woman behind the gambler. "Don't! Please don't risk it all again."

But the appeal was disregarded. The spinner of the wheel waited a few moments, but, receiving no sign that the money on the five to one spot would be changed, twirled it, and again the croupier announced that the bank had lost.

Something like $50,000 had now accrued to the credit of the winner. The woman behind him put her arms about his neck, with her face close to his. It was noticed that she shuddered. The seedy man opposite arose with his eyes glued to the couple before him. Then the woman gave a shriek.

Some one pulled the gambler's hat off. A burst of horror followed the uncovering of a face that bore the pallor of death, eyes that were fixed in a vacant stare on the pile of gold before them. The woman fainted and was carried out of the room by one party of attendants, while the dead gambler was carried out by another. These two objects of interest having been removed, the crowd looked about for the man with the threadbare clothes who had furnished the original stake.

He had disappeared.

While the excitement, the horror, was at its height he was leaving the gambling hall and, passing out of the gardens in which the building stood, called a cab, got in and to the driver, who bent down to hear to what point he wished to be driven, said:

"To the palace of the grand duke."

Stopping before a door in the rear of the building the "fare" turned him over to a lackey for his pay and hurried upstairs. Entering one of the apartments, he summoned attendants, who divested him of his clothes and handed him others.

"Send for the Count de ——," he said.

The Count de —— was the prime minister. In half an hour he appeared at the palace and was ushered into an apartment where the grand duke was awaiting him.

"Count," said the latter, "Baden Baden must cease to be a gambling hell."

"One of our brightest young men, Baron Carl Steinforth, whom I have intended for a high position, has recently—so I heard—been losing his patrimony. Knowing that he has frequented the Casino every day and evening, I went there tonight in disguise partly to see him for myself and partly to look upon what is going on there. I was present when he staked and lost his last coin. I put up a stake for him, which he did not notice, and I now believe he was dead at the time I offered it. I placed it for him where it would win, and it did win several times in succession. The baroness, his wife, came in to look for him doubtless to get him away at the moment I put up the stake. She waited while he won, then discovered the truth. She was carried out of the hall unconscious; her husband was carried out a corpse.

"I desire that you immediately take steps to recall the gambling privileges accorded to this nefarious concern. Let it be your first business on the morrow."

Such is the story of the recall of the license for gambling at Baden Baden as I heard it told by one who had been intimate with members of the grand ducal court. Had it not (the gambling) been transferred to Monte Carlo Europe would have got rid of a central point for gamblers. As it is, the business was simply moved from one point to another. But Germany is fortunate in putting it off her territory.

CIRCULAR SKIRTS.

The Gored Models Are Likely to Win Out In Popularity.

Every woman who remembers the last time that circular skirts were in vogue will call to mind the great difficulty experienced in maintaining an even hem. The circular sides were bound to stretch and sag despite all the efforts of the skillful dressmaker to the contrary.

And, although the circular skirt is featured among the new season's models, there can be little question but that the gored adaptations will win out eventually.

For those who do not mind odd devices the hem introduced by Premet of Paris will make a strong appeal.

The hem is the outcome really of the effort to counteract the sagging tendency of the circular model. It is scooped away at the sides, thereby indicating a longer line in the front and back sections.

In the course of time the sides drop a little bit, and the hem balance is thereby maintained.

Diana's Wrap.

The athletic girl usually prefers a wrap of some fabric other than her skirt, and her choice usually falls on a Norfolk of corduroy or a knitted sweater, the latter in the new striped or checked designs.

She wears no hat, or if she is of the unusual sort, anxious about her complexion, a chapeau of corduroy, satin or soft straw gives the crowning touch to the costume. The pedal extremities are shod with buckskin or canvas oxfords, with heel low rather than otherwise.

CONGRESSMAN BURNETT

Claims Immigration Bill Will Be Passed Over Wilson's Veto.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A careful canvass of the house is being made by Representative Burnett of Alabama and other leaders who are in favor of passing the immigration bill over the veto of President Wilson. A similar canvass is in progress under the direction of those who would sustain the president's disapproval of the bill. Mr. Burnett claims he has pledges of six more votes than the two-thirds necessary to make the bill a law so far as the house is concerned, the president's veto to the contrary notwithstanding.

TORPEDOES SINK MERCHANT SHIPS

German Submarines Send Belgian Relief to Bottom.

LONDON — In addition to the three British steamships, Ben Cruachan, Linda Blanche and Kilcoan, torpedoed and sunk in the Irish sea Saturday two other British merchantmen, the Tokomaru and the Icaria, are believed to have been victims of submarine raids in waters supposedly safe for British shipping.

The identity of the third steamship sunk off the Lancashire coast Saturday was learned when the steam collier Gladys landed at Douglas, on the Isle of Man, eleven of the crew of the Belfast steamer Kilcoan. The Kilcoan was intercepted eighteen miles northwest of the Liverpool bar. Under orders from a submarine the crew of the Kilcoan took to the boats, after which the steamer was sent to the bottom. The Gladys appeared and was ordered to follow the submarine. Her captain complied and picked up the refugees from the Kilcoan. The submarine refused to allow the Gladys to land the refugees at Liverpool and ordered her to land at Douglas.

The steamship Tokomaru, sunk off Havre, carried New Zealand's gifts to Belgian sufferers. Her cargo consisted of 97,000 carcasses of mutton and a quantity of merchandise and clothing.

Five hundred of the Villa soldiers were killed, it is stated, and 800 taken prisoners.

AVIATORS SHELL 4 FRENCH TOWNS

Germans Drop Many Bombs But Damage Is Slight.

VON KLUCK LOSES SON IN WAR

Czar Claims Important Victories Over Germans in Poland and Carpathians —Kaiser Loses 6,000 in Killed and Many More in Wounded and Prisoners in Attacks West of Warsaw.

PARIS, FRANCE.—German aviators hurled bombs with deadly effect in the region southwest of Verdun, according to word received here. One noncombatant was killed near Pont-a-Mousson; a little boy was frightfully maimed at Nancy; where an explosive missile dropped on a schoolyard, and a maternity hospital at Remiremont, sixteen miles southwest of Epinal, was slightly damaged.

News of the latest German air raid reached Paris on the heels of the announcement that German taubes had again successfully bombarded Dunkirk, raining sixty shells upon the seacoast town. It aroused the most bitter indignation here. Paris newspapers voiced the popular demand that the allies' aviators take the aggressive at once and shell German cities in retaliation.

MINES THREATENED WITH HELP FAMINE

Supply of Men Will Not Equal Demand in Copper Country.

CALUMET, MICH. — One big problem, the Lake Superior copper mining companies, are going to have to face when the market for copper metal is righted and moves steadily on its way, is the securing of a sufficient number of men for their mines and surface workings. Every mining company now has long lists of applicants for work and there are many men out of work, but the present over supply of men can not commence to take care of the demand, as it will be when conditions are brought back to normal, or when there will come such a demand for copper, as it inevitably must come, that it will be found necessary to push production at every mine in the country.

DAIRY MEN BOW TO QUARANTINE

Foot and Mouth Diseased Cattle to Be Killed.

INJUNCTION WRIT IS QUASHED

State Regulations So Strictly Enforced That Farmers Were Unable to Sell Their Products—Chicago Milk Supply Was Threatened—Quarantine in Kansas Counties.

CHICAGO, ILL. — Strict enforcement of quarantine regulations brought the farmers of Kane county to time, and they will no longer try to prevent the killing of cattle infected with the foot and mouth disease.

Sitting at Geneva, Judge C. E. Irwin dissolved the injunction he issued some weeks ago against the state veterinarian restraining him from killing cattle found to be affected with the disease.

The hearing was attended by scores of farmers, who had driven for miles over ice-coated roads to urge that the injunction be dissolved. They told the judge that, after the issuance of the injunction the state had imposed such stringent quarantine regulations that they could no longer market their milk, their butter, their grain or their hay.

Business Is Ruined.

As a result the business of practically all the farmers of the county was brought to a standstill and their income practically cut off because a few farmers wished to protect herds of valuable cattle which had become infected with the disease. It was argued that the whole county ought not to be made to suffer for the benefit of the few.

It was pointed out that since the injunction was issued the state and federal governments had done practically nothing to wipe out the disease in the district, but had relied solely on the most stringent quarantine ever ordered to check the spread of the disease to other districts.

Milk Supply Reduced.

Chicago was almost as vitally interested in the situation as was Kane county. It was estimated that 82,000 gallons of milk a day were shut out by the quarantine, and that the ban on the shipment of grain and hay had much to do with the advance of prices of those commodities in this market.

It is thought now that the state will reverse [illegible] that as soon as the known infected herds of cattle are disposed of the quarantine will be lifted and the products of Kane county allowed to go to market again.

Quarantine in Kansas.

WASHINGTON. — Four Kansas counties—Sedgwick, Sumner, Butler and Crowley—were quarantined by the department of agriculture because of the foot and mouth epidemic. An original order quarantining the whole state was recalled following receipts of reports showing the situation was not critical throughout the state.

FLOODS MENACING DAYTON

Second Anniversary of 1913 Disaster Portends Its Repetition.

DAYTON, OHIO. — With the second anniversary of the devastating floods of March, 1913, less than two months away, Dayton, Hamilton and other cities in the great Miami river valley today faced the exact situation that led up to the previous disasters with floods prevention work practically untouched. Litigation has tied up all movements for the safety of these cities. The Great Miami, fed by the winter thaw, has risen from four to six feet. At Dayton ice floes are being dynamited and men are patrolling the river banks and levees

LOW FARES BLAMED FOR $813,765 LOSS

Ann Arbor Railroad Gives Figures in Urging Advance.

DETROIT — In the interest of the railroad campaign for higher passenger fare rates in Michigan, the Ann Arbor Railroad company is sending out a folder compiled by A. W. Towsley, vice president and general manager of the company, presenting a large amount of statistical information bearing on the issue.

Accompanying the folder is a comparison of passenger traffic revenue and volume of passenger traffic for the six years preceding and seven years succeeding Sept. 28, 1907, when Michigan's 2 cent passenger fare law became operative. This statement shows that while total passenger train mileage of the Ann Arbor company increased from 482,028, for the year ending June 30, 1902, to 711,048 for the year ending June 30, 1914, and total number of passengers carried during the same interval increased from 451,208 to 1,057,513, the company's total earnings from passengers carried was $375,522.71 for the earlier and $535,407.55 for the later year.

According to the company's figures, the road has sustained a loss of $813,765.67 since the 2 cent fare law became effective, this representing the difference between its passenger earnings and the amount which it is estimated the earnings would have been under the rates in effect before the 2 cent fare went into effect.

SAYS Y.W.C.A. IS MISMANAGED

Committee Thinks Interests of Working Girls Neglected.

SAGINAW, MICH. — That the board of directors of the Young Women's Christian association is not managing the affairs for the betterment of the membership, which numbers 1,000, is the gist of a statement issued by the press committee composed of Jesse Stapleton, Ella I Feige and Fannie Robbins.

There is a wide breach between the directors and the membership, it is claimed, because the board is not following the objects of the association —spiritual and moral uplift and welfare of the business and working girls of the city. It is said the spiritual work of the association has been practically abandoned, as the directors have discharged the bible and extension secretary. The committee state if the [illegible] is to be conducted properly, a certain number of working girls should be on the board. According to the statement, the last one was removed a year ago and since then the directors have contended that "none of their number is capable of managing so large an enterprise."

TROOPS CURB ROME RIOTS

War Enthusiasts Attack Neutrals With Cries of "Shame."

ROME — Troops with fixed bayonets had to be called out to reestablish order at a meeting which had been organized by senators, members of the chamber of deputies, and other prominent persons, with the purpose of forwarding a movement in movement in favor of Italy maintaining neutrality in the war. A larger number of persons, mostly Republicans, who are against the maintenance of neutrality, gathered at the entrance to the hall and, in spite of the efforts of the police, attacked the neutralists.

Deputy Bruno Belmonte, leader of the neutralists, had his ears boxed and some one spat in his face. He defended himself with his cane. During the disorder cries of "Shame, Prince von Buelow has bought you, you supporters of Austria!" rose from the anti-neutralists.

Billy Unburdened His Guilty Conscience

By LILLIE WENTZ

"Tomorrow's a holiday, Aunt Molly," began Billy, perching himself on the arms of her chair.

"Isn't that jolly?" returned pretty Miss Gale as she tousled his curly hair. "Washington's birthday, eh? What are you going to do, dear?"

"That's for you to say," replied Billy, grinning. "Will you come over to the lake and skate with me, Aunt Molly?"

"Oh, dear!" cried Molly regretfully, and then Billy knew that Ned Hildred had asserted his rights as Molly's fiance and that if Miss Gale went to Silver lake it would be to skate with the handsome Ned and not with her nine-year-old nephew.

"I'm so sorry, Billy," faltered Molly at last. "You can come with us."

Billy shook his head and slipped down from the chair.

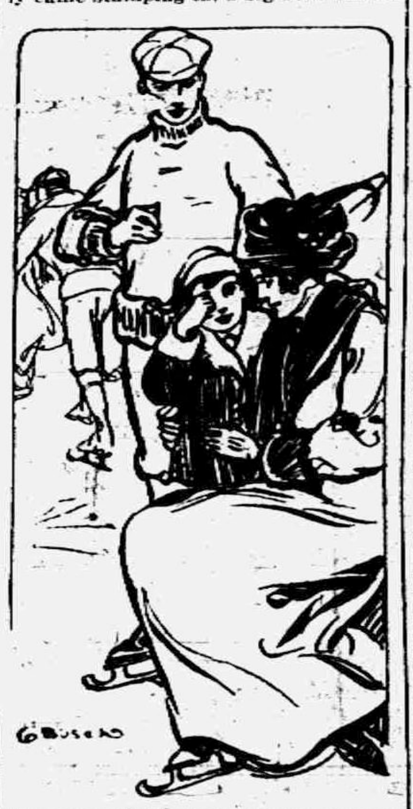
"Two's company and three's none," he quoted glumly as he went away.

"Poor little Billy!" smiled Molly as she gazed after him with lovely, misty eyes. The tears soon cleared away, but the smile remained, for Molly was watching for Ned Hildred. He was going to take her out along the boulevard for a spin in his new car. The absence of snow and the crisp, dry cold of the season would make the driving ideal.

Molly skipped away to the mirror and tried on the new fur motor bonnet that enhanced her delicate loveliness. Her face blushed rosily as her own eyes admitted her fairness.

"Silly!" she chided herself, tossing the bonnet aside.

An hour passed by and then another. Ned Hildred did not come. The afternoon was drawing to a close when Billy came stamping in, a big book tucked under his arm. His cheeks were rosy with the cold, crisp air of a winter day.



"HE NEVER TOLD A LIE!" WAILED BILLY.

"What book have you got, dear?" asked Molly.

"'Life of George Washington,'" returned Billy as he settled himself by a window to read in the fading light.

The door opened and Billy's mother looked in.

"You here, Molly?" she cried. "I thought you were going to drive with Ned."

"I'm waiting," smiled Molly.

"It's too late now, dear; it's getting colder, too," objected Mrs. Moore.

"Oh, I shall not go now," returned Molly hastily, and as her mother withdrew a hurt look came into Molly Gale's face.

Something serious must have happened to prevent Ned from communicating with her. He was always punctilious about such matters.

"I saw Ned Hildred this afternoon."

"You did?" replied Molly quickly and then carelessly, "Where did you see him, dear?"

"He was in his new car. He had a girl with him." There was malice in Billy's tone.

"Billy!" Miss Gale's voice was breathless. That was all she said for a few seconds.

"She was a peach, too," went on Billy cruelly. "She wore white furry things and a big bunch of violets."

"You are very observing for a little boy," said Aunt Molly quietly.

"Did he see you, Billy, dear?"

"Naw!" giggled Billy. "He didn't see nothin' but her!"

After that it was so still in the library that Billy crept up to his own room, where he snapped on the light, and, planting himself in the middle of the bed, proceeded to eat peanuts and enjoy the youthful escapades of the Father of His Country with equal enthusiasm.

Presently Molly gathered up her furry wraps and the charming bonnet and went slowly up the stairs to her own room. If she shed tears over Ned Hildred's defection no one knew it, for she was as sweetly serene as ever when the dinner bell rang.

"Of course you are going to the ball, Molly," observed Mrs. Moore as her sister sat down at table.

"I wouldn't miss it for anything!" cried Molly enthusiastically. "Certainly not with that dream of a gown waiting for me."

"That peach colored satin is the prettiest gown you ever had, Molly," put in Mr. Moore.

Molly flashed a smile at her brother-in-law. "Thank you, James. I can return the compliment by saying that the mulberry velvet is most becoming to you."

There was some gay chatter over the costumes for the Bigleys' colonial ball that evening. Molly's peach satin was to be a surprise for Ned Hildred.

"Johnson says Hildred is to wear white satin as the happy bridegroom," teased Mr. Moore as they arose from the table.

"Nonsense!" laughed Molly, blushing.

Billy, sleepy and solemn even, sulkily endured Molly's good night kiss when she came to his bed in all the glory of the peach colored satin. He expressed open disapproval of the high piled masses of her powdered hair and the audacious black patch on her round chin.

"Good night, lover boy!" whispered Molly. But Billy turned a hot pink cheek away from her caress. "Will you go skating with me tomorrow?" she asked.

"Alone?" he questioned.

"Alone with me," said Molly, and she did not know her tone quavered.

"All right," growled Billy and kissed her sheepishly. "You look fine," he added.

Molly quite forgot Billy and his jealous heart by the time she reached the Bigleys'.

But when Ned Hildred hurried up to her, incomparably handsome in white velvet and silver embroidery, Molly's color deepened and all softness vanished from her eyes.

"You haven't saved one for me?" he asked, his face quite white.

Presently he went home. After that Molly's gayety was entirely fictitious.

The next day it was a very pale and wan Molly who tramped over the snowy paths to Silver lake. Billy, trudging beside her with their skates swung over his shoulders, was a gloomy companion.

Once there among the crowd of merry skaters Molly recovered a degree of cheerfulness, but Billy's gloom deepened with each passing moment.

They had skated to a secluded part of the lake, where Molly sat down on a fallen log to rest.

"I'll go and buy some sandwiches, Aunt Molly," said Billy, turning away.

"Very well, dear. Don't be long."

Billy raced back among the skaters. His bright eyes sought out Hildred's tall form.

"Oh, Mr. Hildred, please come to Aunt Molly right away; it's awful important," quavered Billy, grasping the man's hand.

Hildred's one thought was that Molly had fallen through the ice. He uttered a strangled cry of alarm and darted off, dragging the frightened Billy by one hand.

Breathlessly they dashed up to the spot where Molly sat pensively upon her log. She started violently as they pirouetted to a standstill.

"Why, what is it?" she [illegible] indignantly.

"I—I beg your pardon," murmured Hildred with a furious glance at the wretched Billy. He lifted his cap and wheeled about.

"Wait a minute, please!" cried the small boy. "I've got something to say, and you both got to be here and listen."

"Billy Moore, what is it?" demanded Molly, and then, seeing the quivering lips of the little man, she realized that he was bracing himself for some difficult performance. She put her arms around him, and he seemed glad of their support.

"What is it, dear?" she asked.

Billy told his story in a shaking voice—how he had hated Mr. Hildred because he came between Billy and his adored Aunt Molly. Then the day before, when he had met Mr. Hildred in his car, he had lied to Aunt Molly. He had not told her that Mr. Hildred had stopped the car and bade him take a message to Molly; that the fair passenger in the car was Hildred's sister-in-law, Mrs. Reed, who had been called to the deathbed of a parent in Westchester and that Hildred was rushing her there at top speed.

Billy related how he had gone home and read about the exemplary youth of George Washington, and now, smitten by remorse, he unburdened his guilty conscience to those he had wronged.

"He never told a lie!" wailed Billy in a final outburst of anguish. "I did tell one. I can never be the same as him."

"Laddie," whispered Hildred tenderly, "at this moment there is no man greater than you." And Billy was comforted.

Later the three sat there with arms entwined and heads in loving proximity.

"Old man," suggested Hildred, "I wonder if you wouldn't feel differently toward me if you called me Uncle Ned?"

"Hurrah!" cried Billy. "It does seem different somehow. Let's both kiss Aunt Molly, Uncle Ned." And his suggestion was carried out.

At the Door.

I thought myself indeed secure,
So fast the door, so firm the lock;
But, lo, he toddling comes to lure
My parent ear with timorous knock.

My heart were stone could I withstand
The sweetness of my baby's plea,
That timorous, baby knocking and,
"Please let me in; it's only me."

I threw aside the unfinished book
Regardless of its tempting charms,
And, opening wide the door, I took
My laughing darling in my arms.

Who knows but in eternity
I, like the truant child, shall wait,
The glories of a life to be,
Beyond the Heavenly Father's gate?

And will that Heavenly Father heed
The truant's supplicating cry
As at the outer door I plead,
"'Tis I, O Father, only I?"

—Eugene Field.

A Shining Mark.

A lady grievously tormented with a corn on her toe was advised by one of her friends to anoint it with phosphorus, which in a weak moment she did, but forgot to tell her husband be fore retiring at night. It had just turned 12 when the husband awoke and [illegible] to see something sparkling at the foot of the bed. He had never heard of a firefly in the locality, nor did he ever remember seeing such a terrible looking object as the toe presented. Reaching carefully out of bed till he found one of his slippers, he raised it high in the air and brought it down with great force upon the mysterious light.

A shriek and an avalanche of bedclothes, and all was over. When at last he released himself from the bedclothes he discovered his wife gripping her toe and groaning in a corner of the bedroom, but she had got rid of that phosphorated corn.—London Graphic.

Naming a Horse.

Commenting on the curious names often given to racehorses, a writer in a London daily recalled the historic case of Potoooooooo. The Earl of Egremont had a horse he intended to call Potatoes, and, in going around the stable one evening he gave the stable boy in charge of the horse a piece of chalk and told him to write the name on the corn bin. The boy wrote Pot and then, evidently in some doubt as to the correct spelling, finished the word by repeating the letter "o" eight times. This so amused Lord Egremont and his friends that the horse was so named forthwith.

SLAVE LAW CUTS BOTH WAYS

U. S. Supreme Court Holds Woman Also Can Be Indicted.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The federal white slave law was interpreted by the supreme court as authorizing the indictment of a woman, transported in violation of the law, as a co-conspirator with the person who caused her to be transported.

Justice Holmes, announcing the court's opinion, intimated that a woman could be indicted also if she engaged in a conspiracy to have herself transported with a view to blackmail.

Pension.

"Pension" is among the numerous cases of words of Latin origin specialized to mean something which the original did not mean to the Romans. [illegible] signifies simply a pay, in the broadest sense, and we are at liberty to draw the sound moral that a pension is not really something thrown in as a gratuity, but deferred pay. The word for a soldier's pay was "stipendium," and here we have another curious shift of meaning. Nobody speaks of a soldier's "stipend" now. It is a magistrate or a clergyman whose pay receives that name. The "stipendium" was paid in lumps three or four times a year, and the word came to be used to mean a year's term of service.—London Chronicle.

How the Trouble Began.

He had been reading the paper and occasionally repeating to her some item that seemed particularly interesting. Thus it happened he ran across an item about the invention of a machine for washing horses.

"They'll have machines for washing babies next," he suggested.

"Huh!" she exclaimed indignantly. "I'd just like to see my baby washed by a machine!"

"So would I," he returned.

He afterward explained to some one at the club that it was an exhibition of the insincerity of woman, for, while he had done absolutely nothing but agree with her, she was so displeased that he found it impossible to read his paper in comfort.

LIGHTING PROBLEMS.

How to Arrange Lights Comfortably For the Eyes.

In arranging a light the position of the worker is the first thing to be considered. The light must not come from the front of the work, as we see many people when sewing sitting facing the table which holds the light. Rather sit with your back to the light and with the light falling over your shoulders on the work.

One should be sure to see that the light from under a globe does not strike the corner of the eye. This will in time almost blind a person. The eye becomes inflamed and the sight dull in a very short time. This can be avoided by raising or lowering the light or the worker changing from a low to a higher chair. One may say the higher chair is not so comfortable. That is true, but the comfort we receive is not always the best for us, and the eyesight should be the first consideration.

Another thing which should be important is the selection of the work we pick up in the evening. Those who are employed all day and have been working on colors should select white materials to sew on in the evening, at least for a time, in order to change the strain of the eyes. If one has been working on white all day select sewing with that idea in view and buy the pretty colors. If the hands are used with any materials which are rough that person should not select embroidery silks, but rather use the mercerized floss, since the silk will get rough unless the hands are perfectly smooth. [illegible] working on [illegible] to sew on dark materials wearing a white apron will reflect the light and make needle threading easier. If one is working on the machine and has to thread the needle slip a piece of white material or paper under the foot and much time will be saved. It will also add to the light if white cloth or paper is spread on the table which holds the work. If white materials are used a dark cloth thrown over the lap or on the table will again relieve the eye strain.

Many times the eyes become tired, especially in doing very fine work. Rest the eyes by leaning the head against the back of the chair and spreading a cloth wet with cold water or with a solution of boracic acid over the eyes and leaving it there for five minutes.

A Stubborn Husband.

"My husband is one of the most stubborn men in the world."

"He can't be any more stubborn than mine."

"Oh, yes; I'm sure he must be! Yesterday I had an engagement to meet him at 8 o'clock."

"Yes?"

"Well, it was nearly 4:30 when I got there, and he won't admit yet that the rest he got while he was waiting did him good."—Kansas City Star.

UNCLE SAM'S TRADE STATUS IN THE WAR

Although the United States has more to gain from the war in a material sense, her exports in August decreased 40 per cent., while those of Great Britain were off only 45 per cent. In this month Austrian exports fell from $43,500,000, the 1913 figure to $6,000,000, and imports were 65 per cent lower. French imports were cut 50 per cent, and exports the same. Italian imports were reduced $14,000,000 and exports $22,000,000. In Argentina, Brazil, and Chile the trade with other countries dropped an average of 50 per cent. In August the value of American exports to Germany was $68,737, as against $21,301,274 in the same month the year before. These figures give some idea of the paralysis of trade while armies were mobilizing and the first successes in the field were being recorded in the annals of the day.

Men, in those first thirty or forty days of war, were dazed, inert, crushed down by the sudden collapse of enterprise and fortune. Ports were crowded with ships without cargoes. If there was little going out of the country there was less coming in, and if a nation were a chronic debtor to other nations, this was not to its disadvantage. Exchange in New York on London was quoted as high as $6.50. This prohibited commercial transaction except those of the most urgent sort. The banks of the country pooled their gold, and as we were in debt to Europe to the tune of $3,000,000,000, and some said $400,000,000,—with the bill payable in London, we proceeded to reduce the account out of pocket and then out of resources.

From August 1 to December 31 a most striking change came over the foreign trade status of the country. In the earlier month imports were nearly $22,000,000 greater than exports; in the latter period exports were $110,000,000 in excess of imports. In August exports were $108,198,000; in December they were more than double that figure. As we had been enlarging our sales we had been contracting our purchases, until the December bill to Europe and other countries with which the United States was the smallest in years. Frequently, of the Port of New York have shown a contraction of 40 per cent. Some part of this, of course, is due to inability to secure supplies from markets that made a specialty of them. At the same time when the returns on such articles as silks, jewelery, wines, antiquities, and other non-essentials to a simple life are analyzed, it will be found that the American people are doing without many things which they had accustomed themselves through many years of prosperity, to consider necessary to their happiness—From "The World's Trade in War Time," by Charles F. Speare, in the American Review of Reviews for February.

PROFIT IN GOLDEN SEAL.

A Woodland Crop That May Be Cultivated With Little Trouble.

Speaking of plants that may be cultivated with little trouble and with profit to the grower, a writer in Green's Fruit Grower advises those who have a bit of unused woodland or underbrush to plant golden seal. He considers it one of the most remunerative of plants to raise and says that it requires very little care.

The roots of this plant sold fifteen years ago at 30 cents a pound. The price has steadily advanced. The root is now worth $5.50 a pound, and the dry leaves and stems now sell for 25 cents a pound. It is one of the most widely used drugs known to the modern pharmacopoeia.

At the end of three years you can sort out the mature roots from the young ones and wash and dry them for sale, while you put the young roots back in the ground. At the end of the three years the grower has a yearly crop of roots, and, beginning with the first year, he has a yearly crop of leaves and stems. This is one of the crops on which there is an absolute certainty of a market that will run after you as soon as any golden seal buyer knows you have the goods to sell. Go and ask your druggist or your doctor about the value of golden seal.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

Don't Be Hasty In Judging by It, Lest You Be Deceived.

The same rule often works out in real life. Nobody wrote more dry philosophical books than England's prize philosopher, Francis Bacon. But one day while ill and without consulting any works of reference he dictated a volume of jokes which is still the best collection to be found in London.

JOHN W. VOGEL'S BIG CITY MINSTRELS

Minstrelsy has been, and promises to continue to be, the favorite form of amusement for four-fifths of the theatre-going public—and well it should be—for no manner of a performance can include such a variety of material necessary for the edification of the multitudes; besides it is the cleanest and best of all amusements. Then there are no waits.

Promptly at the appointed hour the curtain rises and from that moment until the final you have fun without a blush, songs of sentiment by the world's greatest vocalists, comic ditties by the best comedians on earth, who also furnish humor without a taint. The songs have been sung; jokes have been told; the Adonis-like person in the middle has his friendly repartee with the various comedians with the bones and "Tambos." Personal grace has been shown and beauty added because of the handsome paraphernalia used in the first part settings

The sentiment of the balladist may have caused you to be possessed of a feeling of intoxication, the festive wit of the comedians has amused you; the charming acts of the first part in its entirety has possibly astonished you, yet the glamor, frolic and fun rolls on without a hindrance.

There's no tiresome overture, but on the contrary the various novel feats gathered from all quarters of the globe commence, and ere the finis has been reached you have, with your brother auditors, proclaimed minstrelsy the king of amusements.

John W. Vogel's Big City Minstrels boast of a silver cornet band of 21 pieces and a double symphony orchestra of fifteen, both under the able direction of the popular director, Prof. James L. Finning, and the Louisiana Glee Club, under the direction of Mr. Edmond Balz, who has the reputation of being the foremost vocal director in the minstrel business, will supply the vocal numbers.

John W. Vogel's Big City Minstrels will appear at the Bradley Opera House next Tuesday, February 9th, and should be witnessed by a crowded house.

Nature tells you about it.
The urine is nature's index
Infrequent or to frequent passage,
Other disorders suggest kidney ills.

Doan's Kidney Pills are for disordered kidneys.

Tecumseh people testify to their worth.

Mrs. George Burroughs, Potawatamie St., Tecumseh, says: "My whole body ached and my strength and energy left me. Knowing several people in Tecumseh who had been helped by Doan's Kidney Pills I got a supply of this remedy at Wright & Son's Drug store and began using them. In a few weeks I improved in every way and the pains and aches were a thing of the past. I cheerfully endorse Doan's Kidney Pills again for the benefit they brought me has been permanent."

SUGAR MAKES YOU GROW.

That, It Seems, Is Why Our Girls Are Becoming Taller.

English and American girls just reaching womanhood, and the next generation in its early teens, are unusually tall, standing a head or more above their mothers. This has been remarked on over and over again, and has been the subject of learned disquisitions. Yet no generally accepted cause for the fact has been given up to this time.

Now comes a London physician of note and says that it is simply a case of lengthened sweetness. By "sweetness" in this particular case the nature of the young ladies is not referred to, but their diet. In fact, statistics of recent years show that Americans and Britons of both sexes are increasing in height and weight. Why? The physician referred to says it is sugar.

Great Britain and America are the sugar eating nations of the world and have quadrupled their saccharine consumption in the last score of years.

This is now the best explanation of an accepted fact and it will have to stand until a better one comes along.—London Tit-Bits.

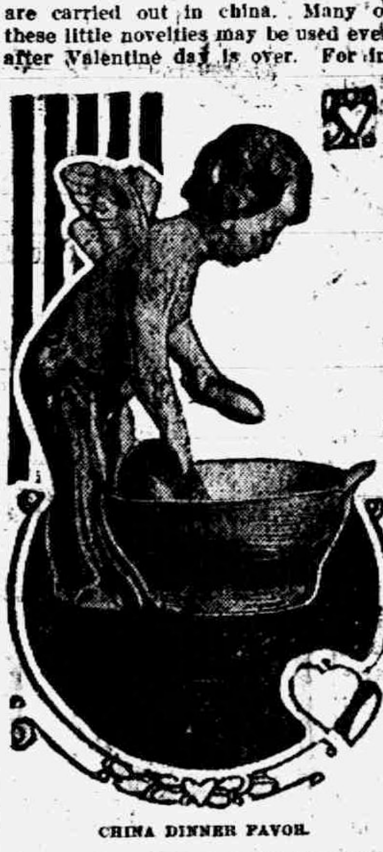
TAILORED SHIRT WAISTS.

Revival of These in Silks of Various Patterns.

A revival of the old time tailored shirt waists is predicted. These tailored shirt waists are of silk, usually in stripe design, which always gives a severe aspect to a blouse cut on plain lines. The blouses, or, more properly, shirt waists, have yokes, long sleeves and high turnover collars of silk, quite after the pattern of the masculine white collar. Perhaps it will even come to the latter, and again our necks will be pinched and hopelessly collar marked, and the sale of peroxide will probably go up as a result.

Valentine's Day Favor.

Many attractive favors for the Valentine day luncheon or dinner are seen on the counters of shops where smart novelties are shown. Some of these are carried out in china. Many of these little novelties may be used even after Valentine day is over. For instance, the winged cupid illustrated here, who is scrubbing a cobwebbed heart in a little tub, may be afterward used as a match holder or receptacle for loose pins. The tub's attractiveness at the dinner or luncheon may be increased by serving it filled with short stemmed violets or fancy bonbons.



CHINA DINNER FAVOR.

Setting Colors in Wash Goods.

Green and lavender materials in many cases will retain their coloring, unhurt by laundry work, if they are soaked first fifteen minutes in about two gallons of cold water to which a cupful of strong vinegar has been added.

Salted water or water to which turpentine has been added will sometimes set pinks and blues.

Colored silk stockings may be successfully washed by following the same rules.

MORE STRENGTH FOR OLD PEOPLE

Mrs. Hutchison—Eighty-One Years Old—Uses No Other Tonic but Vinol and Recommends It to Friends.

Greenville, S.C.—"It is with pleasure I tell others of the great benefit I have derived from Vinol, for the past several years. I am 81 years old and I find Vinol gives me strength, a healthy appetite and overcomes nervous disorders. Vinol is the only tonic reconstructor I have used for several years. I have recommended it to a great many of my friends and it has always proved satisfactory." — Mrs. M. A. HUTCHISON, Greenville, S. C.

Such cases as the above are constantly coming to our attention. If people in this vicinity only realized how Vinol invigorates old people we would not be able to supply the demand.

It is the tissue building, curative elements of the cod's livers, aided by the blood making strengthening properties of tonic iron contained in Vinol, that makes it so successful in building up strength for old people, delicate children and for all run-down conditions. Vinol is also a most successful remedy for chronic coughs, colds and bronchitis. If it fails to benefit any one who tries it we return your money.

Painful Ignorance.

Two pickpockets, notorious thieves, were on trial. None the less, they contrived somehow to put up a good defense, thanks mainly to the cleverness of the lawyer whom they employed. The detective who had effected the arrest spent a miserable twenty minutes in the witness box contradicting himself repeatedly. "Then what made you suspect the men?" asked the lawyer. "As I said before, one of them was wearing an overcoat with a slit in the lining, so that he might operate more easily." "Come, come," said the lawyer. "Would you arrest me if you saw me wearing such an overcoat?" "No, sir. I happen to know who you are. You're a lawyer." "Well, what's the difference between a lawyer and a pickpocket?" The detective shook his head. "I really don't know," he muttered.—Argonaut.

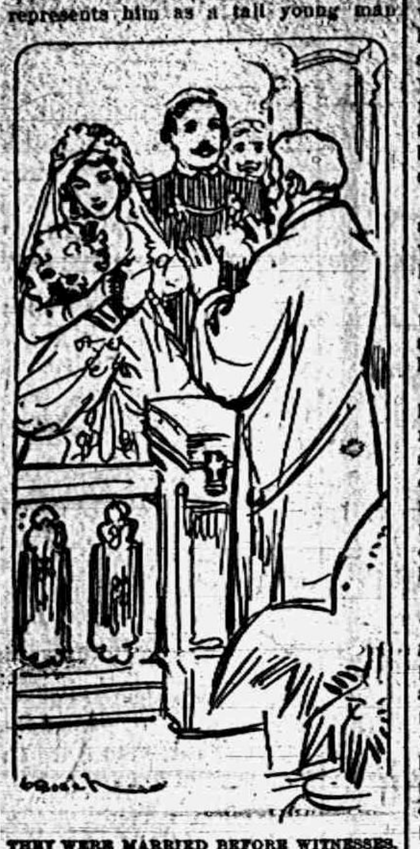
The Story of Mrs. Fitzherbert

She Was the Wife of a Monarch, but Not a Queen

By F. A. MITCHEL

[In the following story no deviation whatever has been made from history.]

Mrs. Fitzherbert was the daughter of a country gentleman. Wedded when very young, she had had two husbands in succession, both dying after having been married to her but a short time, the last, Fitzherbert, leaving her a widow when about twenty-five years old. Being a very attractive as well as a beautiful woman, she was received into the court society in London and attracted the attention of the Prince of Wales, son of George III., with whom America struggled for her independence. He was much younger than she, and a portrait of him taken when he was about eighteen years old represents him as a tall young man with delicate, handsome features. Mrs. Fitzherbert is said to have had beautiful eyes and a mass of golden hair.



THEY WERE MARRIED BEFORE WITNESSES.

The prince fell deeply in love with the young widow. She, realizing the danger to her reputation by the attentions of a prince of the blood, fled to the continent. There she remained some time. But the prince was bound to possess her and wrote letters begging her to return to England. The affair was known to the public, and the lovers were watched with curious interest. There was a law of the realm called the royal marriage act that pronounced any union between a prince of the blood and a commoner, without the sovereign's consent, illegal. It was known that the lady had fled from the prince because she would not live with him except as his wife, and, since the king would not consent, the fact was patent that she could not be his wife in accordance with British law, though she might be under a religious ceremony.

There was another barrier between the prince and Mrs. Fitzherbert. Another law forfeited the succession to any one marrying a Catholic. She was a member of the Roman church. Either of these two barriers was enough to deter any man not desperately in love from such a marriage. But Prince George's passion was so strong that when his marriage with its object seemed hopeless he tried to commit suicide, though whether this was a bona fide attempt or a ruse to secure the lady's consent to an illegal union there is considerable doubt. At any rate, he bore the scar of his wound through life.

Suddenly Mrs. Fitzherbert reappeared in London. Since it was known that she would not live with her royal lover except as his wife, rumors began to be circulated that a marriage ceremony had been performed between them. The prince denied that any such ceremony had taken place. At least he denied that he had married Mrs. Fitzherbert. Nevertheless he had married her before witnesses and she had been furnished by the clergyman with a marriage certificate.

From that time the two lived together as man and wife.

But it was impossible that rumors that the prince had married in defiance of the royal marriage act, and a Roman Catholic at that, should be freely circulated and no notice be taken of them by the parliament. The matter was finally brought up there, and the nation was on the tiptoe of excitement as to the denouement. It was here that Mrs. Fitzherbert received her first blow. The eminent Charles Fox, who had been on intimate terms with Prince George, denied positively in parliament that any marriage ceremony between the prince and Mrs. Fitzherbert had ever taken place. The wife was inexpressibly shocked and never forgave Fox for making the statement. But she showed that marvelous self command that stood by her to the end. Possessing a marriage certificate, it was in her power to prove that she was a wife, but her act would cost her husband a crown.

There was a breach between the prince and his wife at one time, but since society treated her with even more attention than before she was appeased and refrained from producing her marriage certificate. The conditions were paradoxical. The heir apparent was known or at least supposed to have defied the laws of England by marrying without the king's consent and to have forfeited the throne by marrying a Roman Catholic. A denial had been given in parliament, which was not believed. The lady he was supposed to have married was accorded by the court circle (except the king and queen) the honors due to a wife, whereas if she were not a wife she would not be received at all.

Nevertheless Mrs. Fitzherbert, recognized by the nobility as a wife in accordance with any law except that of England's royalty, lived a happy life. Her husband was very attentive to her and showed himself appreciative of all attentions shown her. Their winters were spent in London, their summers in a handsome residence the prince built for his wife on the sea-

But there was a skeleton between them of more importance than the laws of England. The prince was a spendthrift and hopelessly in debt. Parliament would not help him without the king's consent, and he and the king had long waged a bitter warfare. Finally the prince's financial condition became intolerable. Application was made to his father. The king consented to help him provided he would give up Mrs. Fitzherbert. Forced by his necessities, the prince yielded.

Mrs. Fitzherbert, who was not with her husband when this decision was made, would not believe the report concerning it till the evidence was convincing. She immediately broke off all communication with him. It was arranged that he should marry a Hanoverian princess. Though at this second crisis it was in the power of his wife to establish her position, she refrained. For a time she withdrew from the world and lived in seclusion, but no word of censure of her husband escaped her.

The marriage between Prince George and the Princess Charlotte of Hanover was a very unhappy one. He excused himself for it on the ground that it was his duty to beget an heir to the throne, and, hating the princess, as soon as a daughter was born to them he refused to live with her any longer.

He now begged Mrs. Fitzherbert to live with him again. She referred the matter to Rome, and it was held that she, being the real wife, was privileged to live with him, any other marriage he might have made not being recognized by the church. This decided the lady, and she returned to her husband.

It does not appear that this last term which husband and wife spent together was fraught with the same happiness [illegible] became a hard drinker and was under the influence of profligate men. His wife was obliged to divide her husband's love with other women. At different times he had different favorites, each one of whom influenced him against his wife. Mrs. Fitzherbert—she has always been called by her widowed name—bore it all with her accustomed equanimity. It seems remarkable that she could have continued to love so contemptible a character and, more especially, should have consented to suffer the slights she received on account of her false position when she might have at any time righted herself before the world.

Then came the insanity of King George III. and the regency of the prince. The authority now vested in him puffed him with pride, and he desired to be treated with the reverence due a sovereign. Mrs. Fitzherbert, having grown older and in a way less attractive, was put aside, and the king gave her to understand the great gulf there was between a sovereign and a commoner and especially a sovereign and a commoner who had lived with him without being his wife according to the law of the realm.

Finally King George III. died and was succeeded by his son, who now became George IV. He was old and vain and corpulent. He had no direct heir to whom to leave his scepter at his death. He was really attached to but one person, Mrs. Fitzherbert, but he was so proud of his position as king of England that he would have nothing to do with her.

Meanwhile the castoff wife lived a more retired life than formerly. She was universally respected both for her virtues and attractions, but especially for having silently borne the injustice that had been imposed upon her. A reverence for royalty has been handed down among the English people for many generations, and Mrs. Fitzherbert for protecting her royal husband in his guilt stood high among Englishmen and especially Englishwomen. By the church of Rome, which boasts that no sovereign has been sufficiently powerful to obtain from it a divorce to marry again; by the universal law of mankind, she was a wife. But she consented for the good of the king, considered in England the good of the nation, to be regarded by the masses as a mistress.

During the young lover days of this couple the prince and Mrs. Fitzherbert had exchanged miniatures, and so long as they lived together the prince wore his wife's miniature about his neck. When he died as king she was anxious to know if he still wore it. One of his attendants, who examined the body, found it in its accustomed place.

This was a great satisfaction to the discarded wife. After all the king had loved her and her alone till death.

Leather Belts Again.

Leather belts, by the way, are to be revived. As a matter of fact, they have already arrived, as evidenced in certain of the spring models of morning and afternoon costumes, as well as in some of the linen frocks made for southern wear. The belts are not only of patent leather, but also of dull suede, in dark brown, in blue and green, [illegible] white. For early season costumes the smart belt appears to have superseded the girdle.

HELPS FOR HOUSEWIVES.

Rusty looking silk can be made clean and new looking if sponged with the water in which potatoes have been boiled.

To remove machine grease from clothes without taking the colors out rub the spot with a solution made of cold water, ammonia and soap.

To remove tar stains rub the spot first with lard and then with soap. Leave for an hour and then wash in hot water softened with ammonia. If traces still remain rub with turpentine.

To clean a hairbrush mix one-half cupful each of salt and flour and rub through and into the bristles. Shake out, and the brush will be clean and white. This does not soften the bristles as washing does.

HODEIDA INCIDENT CLOSED

Turks Release British Consul and Salute Italian Flag.

Rome, Feb. 8.—The Hodeida incident has been suddenly and unexpectedly solved. The British consul, who was arrested in November in the Italian consulate, where he had taken refuge, was delivered safe and sound to his Italian flag when it was again hoisted over the consulate.

The British consul afterwards sailed on the British auxiliary cruiser Empress of Asia and it is officially announced that the Italian consul has resumed cordial relations with the local authorities.

The satisfactory closing of the incident [illegible] as it does with the Turkish attack on the Suez canal is regarded as most significant. It is an open secret that the settlement of the affair was brought about by Germany in order to avert protest from Italy against the closing of the canal.

FORMER RAIL HEAD HELD FOR BEGGING

Says He Was Once Northwestern Vice President.

New York, Feb. 8.—A man who gave the name of Col. Wm. Wayne Beldin, and who, the police say, was formerly wealthy and well known in Wall street and financial circles, was found guilty of soliciting alms by Magistrate Deuel in the Tombs police court and sent to the work house for ten days.

Beldin, who is about forty-seven years old, said that up to five years ago he was a vice president of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad and was worth more than $1,000,000. He speculated in Wall street, he said, chiefly in railroad stocks, and in this manner lost his entire fortune. Friends and relatives had helped him for a time, he stated, and when such assistance was no longer forthcoming he obtained a position as a waiter in a small restaurant. He lost this position recently, he said, and found himself without funds or home.

Judiciary Mill Halts Until Supreme Court Acts.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 8.—For a short time two judges of the superior court of Grand Rapids sat in the same room. Joseph Renihan, whom the city council elected judge of the court last Monday, was sitting when Peter J. Danhof, whom Governor Ferris named for the same place to fill an unexpired term, entered.

"I have just taken the oath of office," said Danhof to Renihan, "and I am the judge of this court. Being credibly informed that you have usurped, intruded into and unlawfully hold and exercise the office of judge of the superior court in contempt of the people of Michigan and to their great damage and prejudice and to the great damage and prejudice of myself, I hereby make demand on you to surrender, deliver and turn over to me forthwith the said office of judge."

Renihan declined to give up the office.

Judge Danhof ordered court adjourned until Monday, Feb. 15. In the meantime the supreme court of the state will be asked to decide the case.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 8.—The attorney general's office advised Warden Fuller of Ionia prison not to accept any prisoners committed to his institution by Joseph Renihan, who was appointed superior judge at Grand Rapids by the city council. It is the opinion of the attorney general that Peter [illegible] appointed superior judge by Governor Ferris, is the only one who has jurisdiction and in response to Warden Fuller's request for an opinion, the attorney general advised him that he was without authority to accept prisoners sentenced by Renihan.

LUSITANIA FLAG INCIDENT STIRS

It Is Not Believed U. S. Will Make Protest.

CONGRESS MAY THRESH IT OUT

U. S. Has No Law on Subject—Great Britain Has Provision That Would Permit Belligerents to Use British Flag Over Ships Endangered by the Foe.

Washington, Dec. 8.—Though the account of the liner Lusitania sailing under the American flag for the purpose of avoiding being torpedoed by German submarines was the occasion of a great deal of talk here, in the absence of any official report on the subject there was no action taken about it in any administration quarter.

It is very much doubted if the state department does take any action in the matter beyond an inquiry of Ambassador Page as to the truth of published reports and possibly a request for information as to what connection if any the British government had with the matter or possible similar uses of the American flag in future.

In all official quarters it was made clear that the United States had no municipal law on the subject and there is nothing in international law affording a basis for action.

Congress May Thrash It Out.

It is appreciated in official circles that the flag incident is likely to occasion much more comment in the country generally than the German admiralty announcement. It has become known that some members of congress are [illegible] exercised over the incident and vigorous expressions are looked for in the house and senate in the next few days. Officials point out, however, that this government has no basis for protest to any body and will have none unless congress sees fit to pass a law prescribing a penalty for ships touching at American ports using the American flag without proper authority. There is good reason to believe, however, that a hasty protest to somebody regarding the Lusitania's use of the flag while the German admiralty announcement is passed over without a word would be regarded in British quarters as the height of inconsistency.

It is said that there is a general disposition to excuse the flying of a neutral flag by a merchantman for the purpose of avoiding capture or destruction at the hands of the enemy. Such use of a neutral flag does not, of course, entitle the vessel to any protection from the government the flag of which is so used and the vessel is likely to suffer more severely if her deception is discovered by the enemy.

Choice of Flag Bad Judgment.

It is pointed out that the captain of the Lusitania did only what any other commander would have done if he had reason to fear a hostile war ship, particularly a submarine, though his choice of the American flag was not regarded as particularly clever, as the whole shipping world knows there are no such giant vessels as the Lustiania running under the American flag. Therefore any shipping man would have known on sight that the Lusitania was not an American ship. It is also pointed out that undoubtedly the American passengers on board were delighted at any ruse being adopted which would render that vessel less likely to destruction at the hands of the German forces.

It is expected here that the German authorities will hail the Lusitania incident as proof of their contention that the British government on Jan. 31 issued a secret order to its vessels to use neutral flags. British officials deny this charge but point to the British maritime law which permits the use of the British flag by vessels of other nations for the purpose of avoiding capture as ground for British commanders and the British government assuming that there would be no objection on the part of the neutral nations to their flags beings used temporarily for the same purpose.

German Act Not Against U. S.

In official circles there is much greater interest manifested in the memorandum of the German admiralty in explanation of the war zone, published generally. It is concluded the new German move is aimed more at the neutral countries contiguous to Germany than at the United States. The Germans' attitude is regarded as an attempt to retaliate against Sweden, Denmark, Holland and Italy for the agreements entered into with the British government for the prohibition of the exportation of contraband of war from their territories into Germany. There is little doubt that the Germans intended to get supplies through the neutral countries, but British diplomacy supported by the British fleet has made this absolutely impossible. The German hints at possible destruction of neutral shipping is regarded as the kaiser's reply to the British move.

TWENTY MINERS ARE DEAD

Fayetteville, W. Va., Scene of Explosion—167 Men Escape.

Fayetteville, W. Va., Feb. 8.—Twenty miners are known to have been killed and 167 escaped death in an explosion in the Carlisle mine of the New River Coal company. That so many men escaped after being entombed was due to the fact that cage and shaft were not damaged. While many were brought out by the cage, some managed to climb out through the air shafts.

The explosion is believed to have been due to the ignition of a pocket of gas from a miner's lamp.

WHEN THE TIRED MOTHER GIVES OUT

What Then?—The Family Suffers, the Poor Mothers Suffer—Mrs. Becker Meets This Distressing Situation.

Collinsville, Ill.—"I suffered from a nervous break-down and terrible headaches, and was tired all over, totally worn out and too discouraged to enjoy life, but as I had four in family and sometimes eight or nine boarders, I kept on working despite my suffering.

"I saw Vinol advertised and decided to try it, and within two weeks I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and now I am a well woman."—Mrs. ANA BECKER, Collinsville, Ill.

There are hundreds of nervous, run-down, overworked women in this vicinity who are hardly able to drag around and who we are sure would be wonderfully benefited by Vinol as Mrs. Becker was.

The reason Vinol is so successful in building up health and strength in such cases is because it combines the medicinal tissue building and curative elements of cod's livers together with the blood making, strengthening properties of tonic iron. We ask every weak, nervous, run-down man or woman in this vicinity to try a bottle of Vinol on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit.

"POPULAR AMUSEMENTS"

Rev. W. A. Rex Preaches on Above Subject Sunday Morning

We print in part from the sermon of Rev. W. A. Rex of the First Presbyterian church of Tecumseh on the subject of "Popular Amusements," delivered at the Sunday morning service. That this subject was popular with our people was quite evident as the church was well filled.

Rev. Rex took his text from Judges 16:25 "And they said Call Sampson that he make sport for us."

From records one is led to believe that amusement is the chief business now, Greater than the great business of the Standard Oil corporation. If all of the capital invested in amusements were united it would far exceed any amount invested in any business undertaking. A man like Sampson today would make the greatest hit of all time.

The text reveals the characteristics of the human nature. Amusement is as old as Sampson and as new as a week old babe.

Everyone enjoys amusement in one form or another according to their occupation, age, temperament and gauged largely by their intellectual and moral development. We live in a dependent and artificial age. We require others to provide our amusements and recreations for us, so there has grown up a very large Sampson class.

I would speak a good word for this Sampson class of entertainers. They are not children of the Devil and as a class are the average. People have the wrong idea of these folks who amuse us. Most of the lewdness on the stage is being eliminated as people are demanding cleaner amusement.

The public demand a great variety of amusement. The kind of amuse[illegible]

Everywhere the modern church is providing places of amusement under the supervision of the church, and the Y. M. C. A. has long since provided bowling alleys, reading rooms and pool tables for the use of its members.

But if I do not get anything else said about the amusement question, let me say to young and old here, that I trust you have sense enough to know that because certain amusements are a part of the modern church life that these amusements are not proper everywhere else. Certain things may be right and proper under certain conditions and wholly wrong under others. One would never think of manicuring his nails at the dinner table or taking a bath on the front porch. A kiss in our day and age is a token reserved for those to whom we have given our heart's devotion and not for every Tom, Dick and Harry whom we may chance to meet

So in like manner a dance may be conducted in the home or in the parish house, within reasonable hours and select companions and be perfectly proper with a fine kind of enjoyment and amusement. While at a public hall, at 75c per, in a promiscuous crowd, where liquor has a secret place and where those afflicted with social diseases are just as welcome as you, if they have the price and where the dance breaks up at 2 a. m. and some of our high school girls do not get in until 3 o'clock, as has been reported to me of some dances in this town. Then, I say, the good, the right, the propriety of such a dance becomes a very different matter.

This question is a hazardous undertaking for a preacher but the people to whom I am most responsible and concerned about are Presbyterians.

So at least a preacher could say a good deal in this matter and be on the safe side of the church, as he might say a good deal upon some other matters that the General Assembly has given deliverances upon, the liquor question for instance. If our church were compelled to obey all rules and deliverances as some other churches and lodges are compelled to do there would be quite an explosion in the First Presbyterian church of Tecumseh.

Do not stoop to forms of amusements which tend to lower, but seek those that are clean and helpful. Be true to your church and to the Bible as well.

I have no sympathy with the old method of wholesale condemnation and denunciation. What has it accomplished? Would you class common amusements with what is forbidden in the commandments?

A boy sees a bad film at a motion picture show and commits theft; a party engages in a game of cards, a quarrel and then murder; a dance which sometimes leads to adultery, and an auto which leads to Sabbath-breaking, joy riding, etc. What shall we say? Condemn them all? In all of these cases mentioned was it use or abuse? The abuse of every right thing is wrong.

Abuse of amusements does not justify wholesale condemnation. Men and women abuse their stomachs by over-eating. Would you condemn eating? One-quarter of the people abuse the marriage relationship. Would you condemn marriage? A youth in a fit of jealousy shoots his sweetheart. Would you condemn love? Some read bad literature and look at bad pictures. Would you condemn all literature and art? Some abuse the privilege of the auto. Would you condemn all autos? Is a preacher called upon to denounce everything that is abused? Must we deny everything which is abused? If so, then call the two undertakers of our town, there is nothing left. (Here the preacher emphasized the use of these things and denounced unsparingly the abuse.)

Let us not be bigoted, we only drive away and not help. My position is to use only such amusements as lift up and nothing that lowers or degrades. The church, the home, the private club or circle ought to furnish the most of our amusements. If that were so there would be far less evil growing out of the same.

Commercialization is the bane of amusements—a price charged. Commercialization of some of the best things in life has resulted in foul and loathsome vices. Prostitution is the result of commercialization of the marriage relation, the saloon the commercialization of fellowship, the gambling hell the commercialization of the social game, white slavery results from commercialization of the social dance. Practically all harm of the theater [illegible] commercialization. I have not time to discuss all in detail. I do want to say a word about the commercialization of the social dance.

It is said that white slavery's recruiting ground is the commercial dance and I want to tell you why I have made this statement. Let me say that is tame to what some people think of it. By commercial dance, I mean a dance where everybody is welcome who has the price. The man and woman with social disease, the young and innocent, the half drunk, the human harpy who goes not to dance but for the chance to ruin some girl, where beastly men have paid for the opportunity to be unduly familiar—all are admitted and all have a right to feel themselves on a common level, because they have paid the common price; where the hour for quitting is long past midnight, where liquor is often found conveniently near the hall and where there are other places of resort after the dance is over. That is what I mean by the commercialized dance.

You say we surely have nothing like that in our little town. Don't excuse your town because it is small and you think you know all the people. In our cities all the public, and many of the big private dances, are visited by a city inspector—and this has improved matters very much. Who is your inspector here?

I see by the paper that Deputy Smith stopped a boxing bout the other night, and to my mind that is not such a terrible thing, but I presume it's against the law—but Smith [illegible] might find something infinitely worse from a moral standpoint if he happens to be on hand after the close of one of our public dances if the stories that have been told me are true. And I do not refer to that social event which occurred during the Holidays.

At some future date I may discuss more in detail these stories that have come to me in regard to these public dances and also some stories in regard to a certain club room. I can hardly believe these stories true, for I think I know many of the persons about whom these stories are told. But let me say if they are true, then this town needs a general vice clean-up.

When we consider the great physical temptation connected with the promiscuous dance (and anyone who has ever danced will concede that the attraction is little less than sexual) we cannot be too choice of our associates.

In the vice investigation in New York, of the fallen women who testified as to the reason, 75 per cent. said it was through the public dance and its associates. In Chicago and Kansas City the percentage is about the same. This seems extraordinarily high when we consider the many other ways in which women have gone to ruin. When Billy Sunday was in Toledo three years ago he made the statement that, after every big commercial dance, the "red light" district is over crowded with young men. The young women were inclined to laugh at him until they quietly made an investigation and found that he had not only told the truth, but a big truth. And now it is a recognized fact that many young men, after spending long hours at a swell promiscuous dance with reputable young women, will see these young women to their homes and then spend the remainder of the night with indiscriminate companions.

So I say, in view of these facts that I have only hinted at, we need to exercise a great deal of care in regard to these matters. We need to be careful where we dance, with whom we dance and how long we dance. However a lodge, a select club or an exclusive party that exercise reasonable and common decency, need have no other results than recreation and amusement of a helpful kind.

Amusement is part of life, whatever helps is right, whatever hinders is wrong. Jesus put it thus, "Does it save life, does it kill" The Bible says, "A time and place for everything under the sun."

In Right.

Ted—"How was it you didn't object to her wearing the necklace the other fellow gave her?" Ned—"Why, old man, she let me fasten it on!"—Judge.

TWENTY BUSHELS MORE CORN PER ACRE

Steward, Ill.—There may be happier farmers in Illonois than H. B. Coffman, of this town, but it is doubtful.

Mr. Coffman started in his season's production with the wise determination to convince himself just what plant food would do for his soil.

He plowed the ground in the spring harrowed twice and planted with seed that tested 98 per cent.

On twenty acres of his poorest land he used fertilizer, applying it through the attachment on his corn drill. On his best land he used none.

Note the remarkable result. The use of fertilizer entirely reserved the normal order of things.

Mr. Coffman's poor soil—the land from which he was fortunate heretofore to eke any kind of profits—raised 55 bushels per acre, while his best soil yielded but 35 bushels.

Mr. Coffman is happy—not over the profits of his 20 lean acres, but because he realizes what the use of plant food on his entire farm will mean next year.

New Firm Opens Up For Business

The Tecumseh Co-operative Association opens its doors for the first time today. With its opening the old firm of Slayton & Son which is so well known to our readers will pass out of existence. The new firm is capitalized for twenty-five thousand dollars and is composed of nearly 125 of our most progressive and prosperous farmers who have subscribed for the stock; there are however a few shares left that will be offered for sale while they last.

This Co-operative Association is a local affair officered and managed by local people and will distribute the profits after paying 6 per cent. to capital, back to the people who trade with the association. in proportion to their patronage allowing ½ dividends to non-members. This is known as the famous plan of Rochdale, England, Americanized to conform to conditions in this country.

It is the intention of the Association to handle implements of all kinds harnesses, feed and coal and to add other lines as trade demands.

WRIT OF MANDAMUS DENIED BY THE COURT

At the session of the court held Monday, the petition for a Writ of Mandamus presented by the Drys to compel the board of Supervisors to meet and reconsider their action on the local option question, was denied by Judge Chandler. KALAMAZOO, MICH. — When James Czmadia called at the county clerk's office to obtain a marriage license he found he had lost the slip of paper with the woman's name on it. He was unable to obtain the necessary permit until he went to the bride's home and learned her name.

Czmadia called at the county clerk's office two years ago and obtained a license, which he never used. He told the clerk the woman had changed her mind after the two had quarreled over who should perform the ceremony.

Fire Imperils Village.

BANCROFT, MICH. — Fire caused by an explosion in a barber shop here late Wednesday night, destroyed an entire business block and did damage estimated at $35,000. HODEIDA INCIDENT CLOSED

Turks Release British Consul and Salute Italian Flag.

ROME — The Hodeida incident has been suddenly and unexpectedly solved. The British consul, who was arrested in November in the Italian consulate, where he had taken refuge, was delivered safe and sound to his Italian flag when it was again hoisted over the consulate.

The British consul afterwards sailed on the British auxiliary cruiser Empress of Asia and it is officially announced that the Italian consul has resumed cordial relations with the local authorities.

The satisfactory closing of the incident, coinciding as it does with the Turkish attack on the Suez canal is regarded as most significant. It is an open secret that the settlement of the affair was brought about by Germany in order to avert protest from Italy against the closing of the canal.

TWO JUDGES DISPUTE OVER RIGHT TO OFFICE

Judiciary Mill Halts Until Supreme Court Acts.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH. — For a short time two judges of the superior court of Grand Rapids sat in the same room. Joseph Renihan, whom the city council elected judge of the court last Monday, was sitting when Peter J. Danhof, whom Governor Ferris named for the same place to fill an unexpired term, entered.

"I have just taken the oath of office," said Danhof to Renihan, "and I am the judge of this court. Being credibly informed that you have usurped, intruded into and unlawfully hold and exercise the office of judge of the superior court in contempt of the people of Michigan and to their great damage and prejudice and to the great damage and prejudice of myself, I hereby make demand on you to surrender, deliver and turn over to me forthwith the said office of judge."

Renihan declined to give up the office.

Judge Danhof ordered court adjourned until Monday, Feb. 15. In the meantime the supreme court of the state will be asked to decide the case.

LANSING, MICH. — The attorney general's office advised Warden Fuller of Ionia prison not to accept any prisoners committed to his institution by Joseph Renihan, who was appointed superior judge at Grand Rapids by the city council. It is the opinion of the attorney general that Peter J. Danhof, who was appointed superior judge by Governor Ferris, is the only one who has jurisdiction and in response to Warden Fuller's request for an opinion, the attorney general advised him that he was without authority to accept prisoners sentenced by Renihan.

LUSITANIA TRICK NOT UNCOMMON

United States and Confederacy Did Same Thing.

LAW BLOCKED BY ROOSEVELT

Ministers of Denmark and Netherlands Call at State Department—Regard Attitude of Germany as Very Menacing—U. S. Has Taken No Action in Either Case.

WASHINGTON — Both the Lusitania incident and the German naval zone were much discussed at the state department. Minister Rappard of the Netherlands and Minister Brun of Denmark called to learn the views of the United States on the question of the naval zone. They were informed that this government has not taken any position on either matter and that there was nothing for it to communicate to other neutral governments at this time. Representative Flood of the house committee on foreign affairs called on Secretary Bryan and the issue was discussed at their conference.

It was learned that the state department has not yet received confirmation of the reports from Liverpool that the Lusitania was specifically directed by the British admiralty to fly the American flag in passing through danger zone. It is conceded, however, that should it be established that the British government did issue such instructions either to the commander of the Lusitania or to shipmasters generally, its action would properly afford basis for inquiry on part of the United States as to the justification and propriety of the government proposing such use of the American flag.

United States Did Same Thing.

Inquiry among officials further tended to show that not only has the United States failed to enact any legislation or take any position diplomatically covering the exact case of the Lusitania, but that the practice has been generally countenanced as a ruse de guerre and more or less to be expected in war. American war ships and merchant ships have frequently adopted an alien flag for purposes of deception in time of war and have been deceived by enemy vessels using the same device. The confederates used this ruse in the civil war and the confederate steam ship Oneida slipped past the federal war ships at Mobile under the British flag.

Roosevelt Once in Way.

In 1900, it was proposed by a naval board headed by Admiral Stockton that the use of the American flag be absolutely prohibited to vessels having no right to it. At the direction of President Roosevelt, however, his attention having been called to the great prevalency of the practice in American and foreign shipping, the rule never became a part of the United States regulation.

Regard German Threat Serious.

Both the Danish and Netherlands ministers indicated to officials of the state department that they regard the German admiralty decree with its threats of destruction of neutral ships as a very serious matter. They have not been authorized, however, to suggest joint action by the United States and other neutrals in the mater. It is understood that the state department does not in any event contemplate action jointly in whatever step it may decide to take.

SOLONS' WATER BILL IN MICHIGAN IS HIGH

Some Think Chloroform Would Lessen State Expenses.

LANSING, MICH. — What doth it profit a state to have a "dry" legislature and then buy it water to drink at the price of 20 cents a gallon?

The house consumes about $50 worth of water a week, while the senate manages to worry along with about twelve five gallon bottles at $1 a piece. At least that is the record the two branches have made so far, and there is no indication of them cutting down on their drinking.

Incidentally, the water is imported —imported all the way from Mt. Clemens. Lansing mineral water dealers are kicking, but so far they have been unable to change the orders for water.

Until the legislature convened the supreme court justices were the only set of men in the capitol with nerve enough to drink $1 water. When the legislature met it was decided that what was good for the supreme court was good for the senate and house. Consequently the Mt. Clemens water, in five gallon casks, at the rate of $1 a cask, began to come into the capitol and it is still coming.

Some of the members insist that beer would be cheaper. Some even suggest chloroform.

TROUT USED IN GOITRE TEST

Physicians Watch Fish to Learn Relation of Water and Disease.

BATTLE CREEK — Brook trout are being made the "goats" in the goiter test of the Goguac lake and Verona well water, used in Battle Creek for drinking. The test is being made by the Calhoun County Medical association. Numerous cases of goitre in and around Battle Creek aroused the physicians to action. It is known, they say, that goitre is often found in fish. They accordingly decided they would place fish in huge tanks of the two kinds of water and observe the results. The theory is that the thyroid glands are affected by the water, and that their enlargement causes the affliction known as goitre.

A goitre census of the city will be taken to find out the exact number of cases here. Physicians have prepared special census cards. They are asking Albion, Marshall and Kalamazoo physicians to take a similar census for purposes of comparison.

QUICK AND CHEAP JUSTICE

Bay City Man Convicted and Sentenced With Speed.

BAY CITY, MICH. — For the first time in the history of the Bay County Circuit court a prisoner was convicted and sentenced during the night, when Louis Prieur, thirty-two, early in the morning was found guilty of a statutory offense and a few moments later was sentenced to from two to five years in Jackson prison.

The charge against Prieur was brought by a fifteen year old girl, whom it is alleged he took on a motorcycle to a number of country road houses. Prieur has a local reputation as a motorcycle rider and a long distance runner. Judge Nelson Sharpe of West Branch who heard the case, recommended that Prieur serve two and one-half years.

Prisoners to Starve First.

AMSTERDAM — The Cologne Gazette says regarding Great Britain's plan to cut off food supplies from Germany: "Prisoners of war must starve first. We have 600,000 prisoners and the parts of Belgium and France we occupy contain 11,000,000 people. If it comes to starving the subjects of hostile countries will suffer first."

PREDICTS BUSINESS BOOM

J. A. Farrell, Says U. S. Will Soon Feel Prosperity Wave.

PITTSBURGH, PA. — Courage and co-operation in business and confidence in a restoration of prosperity was the advice expressed by James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel corporation, in an address before the Engineers' Society of Western Pennsylvania here.

Among reasons for encouragement, Mr. Farrell quoted "eminent European and American authorities" as calculating that the United States' excess of exports over imports in 1915 may easily reach $1,000,000,000; and he said that the balance of trade in favor of the United States for the opening month of the year is at the rate of $1,500,000,000 a year. "The years of greatest prosperity in the United States have been when the balances were largely in our favor," asserted Mr. Farrell. "It is not imprudent to predict that our total farm values for the current year, for the first time in the annals of this or any other country will pass the $10,000,000,000 mark."

ITALIAN SOLDIERS RETAINED

Royal Decree Orders Men of Second Category Held in Line.

ROME — A royal decree orders that the soldiers of the second category classes of 1893 and 1894, who could have returned home, shall now be retained under the colors until May 31, 1915.

Another decree just issued prohibits the exportation of fresh or preserved pork and other preserved meat, chestnuts, fowl, oil, fat and tallow. This decree, with the former royal decree prohibiting exports of certain other goods, completes the ban on the exportation of anything which might be used as food for man or beast.

500 Miners Are Given Work.

IRON RIVER, MICH. — Approximately 500 iron miners, who have been idle for several months past, have been given employment by resumption of operations, and it is expected conditions will be about normal by the time navigation opens in the spring.

With the men taken on this week about 2,000 miners are being employed in this section.

FRENCH BATTLE TO RETAKE POST

Make Desperate Attempts to Retake Bagatelle.

BRITISH HOLD LA BASSEE LINES

Telegraphic Advices From Danzig, German Navy Base, Cut Off—New Move by Kaiser Feared—Big Battle on For East Prussia—Hungarian and Austrian Relations Strained.

PARIS. — French troops, heavily re-enforced, were endeavoring to retake the advanced positions along the line of Bagatelle, in the Argonne region, which it was necessary to cede to the Germans following their assaults in overwhelming number. The fighting continues without interruption, and it is stated that the loss on both sides have been very heavy.

From the Argonne to the Aisne the artillery duels contine, it is reported that the Germans are again massing their forces along the sector north and east of Soissons, and this is believed to indicate another impending assault by Von Kluck's forces at this point. From the Aisne north to La Bassee there have been heavy artillery exchanges, in which it is stated that the French gunners have had much the best of it.

Along La Bassee Canal the Germans continue their efforts to break through the British lines without success. The enemy has suffered very heavy losses here, as they have been forced to attack across low ground over which the British quick firers have had an uninterrupted sweep.

From the sea to Nieuport the artillery operations continue, but much of the ground is again flooded, making serious offensive operations impossible.

Danzig Advises Cut Off.

LONDON — The Daily Mail's Copenhagen correspondent considers significant the fact that since Sunday all telegraphic communication with Danzig (near the mouth of the Vistula river and bordering on the Baltic sea) has ceased.

Danzig is a base of a great part of the German fleet and all the neutral steamers lying in the harbor there have been prohibited from sending out telegrams or letters. All timber shipments between Denmark and Danzig also have been stopped, says the correspondent.

Big Battle On For East Prussia.

PETROGRAD — The battles are growing in intensity at the two extremities of the fighting line in East Prussia, as well as in the Carpathians. On the Warsaw front the conflict has subsided. The fighting line from the Province of Plock in Russian Poland, as far north as Tilsit, in East Prussia, is virtually continuous.

The Germans apparently are taking the offensive from Gumbinnen and the Masurian lakes, as far south as Lipno, in Poland.

Roumania and Austria Strained.

VENICE — According to the Secolo's Vienna correspondent, the Austro-Hungarian minister at Bucharest, are badly strained on account of the minister's alleged unsatisfactory explanation of the massing of Austrian troops in Transylvania.

Norman B. Ream, Financier, Dead.

CHICAGO — Norman Bruce Ream, one of the world's biggest financiers and a product of Chicago, died in New York, where he had made his home for fifteen years. He was seventy-one years old. He was one of the chief organizers of the United States Steel corporation and was a director of the Pullman company, the First National and First Trust and Savings banks of Chicago, and also of numerous other large corporations.

The Inscrutable Face

How He Made His Dream Come True

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Dale Malcolm, spinning down the Boston post road in his little runabout, saw the gayly painted wagons of the gypsy camp and slowed to a standstill.

Immediately a horde of ragged children surrounded the car and begged with whining insistency.

Malcolm tossed a handful of coppers into the road, and while the children scrambled for them he started the car.

He halted the car again and bought a bracelet jangling with silver coins from a frowsy woman. It set him dreaming wistfully of the far countries from which this woman's ancestors had come.

He awoke from his day dream suddenly. A brown, wrinkled hand was thrust under his nose, and an aged crone whined to tell his fortune.

Laughingly he crossed her palm with a silver half dollar. "I expect a good fortune for that," he said.

The crone nodded.

"What is sent you will get," she cackled—"no more, no less."

She grasped Malcolm's left hand and studied the lines closely.

"A life pent up in the towns," she muttered—"money, money, money getting while the world calls! Fool! Gray towers where devils run to and fro and the roar of sound is like the roar of the ocean, while the green world calls!"

Malcolm smiled as he recognized a quite accurate description of the great skyscraper where he worked every day.

"Ah, the handsome gentleman will love! I see the moonlight falling on the wise countenance of the silent one. In the shadow of the mysterious face she will come. You will go to strange lands together and be happy. Remember the mysterious face. Thank you, sir!" She stepped back as Malcolm started the car, and in a moment the camp and its picturesque followers had vanished.

"I AM AFRAID I CANNOT STAND," SHE FALTERED.

Dale Malcolm smiled to himself as he remembered the gypsy's prophecy concerning the mysterious face in whose shadow he was to meet his love.

"No chance of meeting my fate this year," sighed Malcolm as he ate his solitary dinner at the club where he made his home. "It's stay in little New York one more year, Dale, my lad, and then, when the Trainor deal is successfully concluded and the Binner estate is settled, I'll sell out my share to Wakely and set out on my travels. Meantime the moon will wax and wane on the inscrutable face of the silent one many times before I arrive."

So spoke Dale Malcolm, but the fates had willed it otherwise. He had yet to learn that the daughter of the Egyptians had mystic knowledge of events to come.

A week later he pulled down the top of his desk and went to the street, where his little car waited at the curbstone. He had promised himself a run into the country, but when he came to Central park he recollected that there was a new picture in the gallery of the Metropolitan museum that he desired to see, and so presently he found himself standing before the priceless picture which had been lent by a millionaire. From one painting to another Malcolm wandered, and from the picture gallery he went from one collection to another until he reached the Egyptian room. It was growing late and near closing time when Dale Malcolm suddenly discovered that he was standing before a large framed photograph of the sphinx.

"This is about as near to the silent one as I shall get this year," he chuckled to himself just as he turned away.

There was a slight scream and a fall on the floor beside him.

Dale turned hastily to find almost at his feet a girl who had slipped on the polished floor. When he bent to assist her to rise he noted that in spite of her pallor she was very lovely and that the color of her black lashed eyes just matched the brown velvet of her costume.

"I am afraid I cannot stand," she faltered, leaning against him. "I believe I've sprained my ankle. If you will assist me to a seat"—

She leaned her head against the back of the seat, and, taking a small gold vinaigrette from her hand bag, she held it to her dainty nose. When her hand languidly dropped Dale quietly took the golden toy from her hand and applied it.

Presently she opened her eyes and smiled deprecatingly at him.

"Thank you very much," she said. "If you will summon a taxicab and assist me to the entrance I shall be very grateful. I am sorry to trouble you, but"—

"My own car is at the door," suggested Malcolm. "If you will let me drive you home it will save delay."

"Thank you. You are very kind. I live just around the corner in Eighty-fourth street. Ah!" She winced with pain as she endeavored to walk.

After that she took Malcolm's proffered arm, and just as they turned away the young man looked backward. Through the window he saw the new moon, and his glance also took in the picture of the sphinx and the girl beside him.

His heart leaped suddenly so that he started violently.

"What has happened?" asked the girl quickly.

"Nothing that matters now," he said as he assisted her in her slow progress through the rooms.

In spite of his calm demeanor Dale Malcolm's everyday self assurance was staggered by the recollection of the gypsy's prophecy and the coincidence of meeting this beautiful stranger actually in the shadow of the pictured face of the silent one, the sphinx.

In ten minutes Dale was assisting Vera Lane up the front steps of the handsome house where she lived and giving her into the care of a very solicitous butler.

After that things fell very flat for Dale. He dined at his club after a run out to the gypsy camp, only to find that it had vanished from the grove of chestnut trees. He went to a theater in the evening, but the play had no meaning for him. Always he saw the lovely face of Vera Lane, and constantly he heard the prophetic voice of the gypsy fortune teller:

"I see the moonlight falling on the wise countenance of the silent one. In the shadow of the mysterious face she will come. You will go to strange lands together and be happy. Remember the mysterious face."

Over and over again the words sang themselves through his brain until when he went to bed he fell asleep to dream of standing in the shadow of the sphinx on the Gizeh plain and beside him was Vera Lane. Now she was his bride, and they were on their honeymoon, visiting strange lands even as the gypsy had foretold.

Dale awoke suddenly and sat up in bed.

"I'll make that dream come true!" he said grimly, and so, turning over, he sank into a dreamless sleep.

The next day he called to inquire concerning Miss Lane's injury, and, receiving word that she was much better, he was obliged to content himself with that. There was nothing more he could do now save to find some mutual acquaintance who would effect the introduction that would, he now believed, [illegible] paradise to him.

He dreamed of Vera Lane by day and night, and his business friends clapped him on the shoulder and told him to take a rest. He certainly needed it. Well, if he wouldn't take sound advice it meant a sanitarium and the rest cure for him!

To all of which Dale listened respectfully and then went on dreaming.

His women friends confessed themselves bored to extinction when Dale made what he considered cleverly noncommittal inquiries concerning Vera Lane. At last he dropped in at a tea, for which functions he had a deadly hatred, and the first person he saw was Vera Lane talking to her hostess. The girl moved away as he approached.

Mrs. Fletcher smiled wickedly at him.

"I simply asked you so that you could meet Miss Lane," she whispered. "I've heard all about it from Agatha. She says you've bothered her to death for an introduction to a girl she hardly knows. But now, young man, I hope you're satisfied."

"Because of your goodness I'll tell you the reason why," said Dale gratefully, and he related his incident with the gypsy fortune teller.

Mrs. Fletcher was delighted with the tinge of romance in Dale's story, so presently she led him to the corner where Vera Lane was drinking tea and chatting with a group of women, and a little later Dale was listening to her sweet voice as she thanked him for his assistance on that October evening when she had sprained her ankle.

It is a fact that when spring came Dale Malcolm turned over the executive department of the business to his partner and set forth on a journey around the world. He did not go alone. He had made his dream come true, and finally he stood on the plain of Gizeh, looking up at the silent one, and beside him was his bride, Vera, whom he had met in the shadow of the inscrutable face, even as the gypsy had predicted.

Belgian Hedges.

In Belgium there are no stone or hawthorn hedges like those in England. Instead of being inclosed by a hedge the fields are raised up by fairly high earth banks and the roads are cut out of them, as it were, so that when you are walking in the country you are down in a sort of valley with low green banks on either side of you.

The things that are chiefly cultivated in Belgium are the beet root—for making the cheaper kind of sugar, you know—and you can see field upon field of their red-green leaves stretching on either side of you as you walk along. Flax is also much grown over there, and in summer time the fields are a pretty sight when the pale blue flax blossoms are out in full bloom. Belgian asparagus is also renowned all over Europe. It has white instead of purple-green tips.—London Mail.

Tough Old Vessels.

If the life of the old man-of-war was longer than that of the present Dreadnought the old merchantman lived longer still. The Lively, for instance, when wrecked at Cromer in 1888 had been afloat two years over a century. The Liberty, too, built at Whitby in 1750, was in regular use till 1856, and the Betsy Cains, which began life as a frigate and ended as a collier, went down in her one hundred and thirty-seventh year. And in 1902, according to a daily paper, the Anita, then trading between Spain and America, dated from the days of Columbus.—London Sun.

Her Amendment.

Little Lola had been given a short poem to commit to memory by her teacher. In it these lines occurred, "Sail on, ye mariners, the night is gone." Later when requested to repeat the poem she rendered the lines mentioned thus, "Sail on, ye married men, the light is gone."—Chicago News.

Avoid Introspection.

The Turkish Empire.

The Turkish empire is composed of many mixed races. It includes Greeks, Slavs, Albanians, Armenians, Jews and Circassians.

There is no wisdom like frankness.—Beaconsfield.

THE CITY BEAUTIFUL

A most serious effort is being made to build The City Beautiful, of the poet's dream, in a most attractive location in the State of Colorado. This beautiful utopia has already made striking progress toward realization. The foundations already laid comprise the townsite of Industrial City, large areas of fertile land, many natural resources of great value, a trustworthy personnel of prominent men, a practical program and ideal purposes which are all together altruistic. To establish justice in the distribution of wealth by establishing industrial co-operation is economic aim.

The location selected in North Park a beautiful mountain valley or plateau where 2400 square miles of the most picturesque landscape in Colorado are surrounded by 800 miles of snow-capped mountains. The builders of The City Beautiful have about 6000 acres of land; water rights for irrigating 7000 acres with 20 miles of irrigation ditch dug an inexaustible coal mine with a vein of coal 40 feet in thickness a hotel and numerous cottages; several farm houses; crops harvested and new crops planted; herds and flocks and a brilliant outlook for splendid developments during the coming season. The City Beautiful is to be platted with beauty as an aim. Buildings are to be restricted to conform to a general plan. All work and industries are to be co-operative to the end that poverty will be abolished and economic justice established in all the business relations between the Co-worker Citizens. The projectors affirm that they have worked out a plan by which, in The City Beautiful Co-Workers will receive the full product of their toil and the fear of want will no longer prevail.

The chief promoter of this promising utopia is the Rev. Hiram Vrooman of Hastings, Iowa. Associated with the Rev. Vrooman in this idealistic work is his brother, Hon. Carl Vrooman, high in political position and influence at Washington as first Assistant Secretary of Agriculture. Other members of Managing Board of the enterprise are such men as Hon Geo. F. Washburn of the Washburn Realty Trust, Lt'd, of Boston, nationally known for his ethical and idealistic activities; Mr. David Rosenheim, one of Chicago's most successful merchants and a man somewhat of the type of the late Joseph Fels; Ben' J. O. Flower, founder and editor of the Arena Magizine; Judge John Barnd of Colorado; Hon Leo Vincent of Denver; and numerous other men of prominence.

GIVE MILLION FOR RESEARCH

Drs. Mayo to Establish Foundation Open to Medical Graduates.

MINNEAPOLIS — Drs. William J. and Chas. H. Mayo of Rochester, world famous surgeons, propose to establish a $1,000,000 foundation for medical research and to place the foundation under certain restrictions in the hands of the University of Minnesota board of regents. It is proposed that interest from the funds be used in research work at Rochester, be open to graduate university medical students. For years the Doctors Mayo have conducted a surgeons' clinic at Rochester. The surgeons now propose to put the work on an official basis, making provision for graduate instruction at Rochester which will lead to an additional degree granted by the university.

At a meeting of the medical college faculty the plan was approved by a vote of 39 to 26. The action will now go to the medical college advisory board and it is believed will be approved.

Votes One Battleship, Then Two.

WASHINGTON — On a motion by Majority Leader Underwood, the house voted 142 to 120 to cut the naval building program from two battle ships to one. Then it reversed its vote, replacing the two battle ship provision in the bill by a vote of 148 to 139.

NAT WON HIS WAGER.

He Proved He Could Make Money Off the Stage as Well as on It.

Sheridan Shook, one of the most celebrated of the New York theater managers of his generation, used to tell with a characteristic chuckle a story illustrating the quick wittedness, the enterprise and the native shrewdness of Nat C. Goodwin.

It was during Goodwin's engagement in "Hobbies," of which he was the life and center. Shook, A. M. Palmer, Edward E. Rice and other theatrical magnates of that well remembered time were sitting near the curb in front of the Union Square theater one afternoon talking shop, when Goodwin, who had been to the funeral of a fellow Thespian, joined the group. He was sad and mad. Being asked the reason why, he explained that the clergyman's eulogy had made an impression on him and that one of the actors in attendance upon the solemn services had persisted in talking shop. The deeper he went into details in his explanation the more disgusted he became with player folk in general and expressed a wish to quit the profession.

"Huh!" snorted Shook, "you couldn't do anything but act."

"Couldn't I?" (This with sure confidence in his versatility.)

"No," Shook persisted, "you couldn't earn your salt in any other way."

After considerable discussion of the matter, with more or less heat on Goodwin's side and exasperating imperturbability on Shook's, the latter bet Godwin a week's salary that he could not make the same amount in the same time by any other means than his regular appearances before the footlights.

Goodwin eagerly took on the wager, with the stipulation that it must be decided in the week next following, and he agreed that he would interrupt his playing in the meantime.

Summoning his Yankee ingenuity to his aid, Goodwin hit upon an idea. He placed an advertisement in a morning newspaper of large circulation:

WANTED.—A companion to accompany a gentleman to Europe; salary no object; good fellowship the only requisite; send stamp for reply.

Before the end of the week Goodwin had received 8,500 replies. Since the postage in those days was 3 cents his revenue from the sale of the stamps exceeded his salary as an actor and thus he was able to claim forfeit from Shook.—Detroit Free Press.

ON TO FLORIDA.

The following is in part a letter received by Charles Lowe of Ridgeway from his sister Mrs. Alf Linn who in company with several others, made the trip to Florida in their car:

Grand Island, Florida, Jan. 8, 1915.

Well, Charlie, I thought maybe you would like to know a little of our trip south.

We started November 4th, first going to Toledo via. Sylvania, then on to Cleveland. We passed many nice summer homes and, as there had been no frost, everything was in its summer beauty. I think the lake must temper the frost.

We went through the oil fields for miles. The country is level and very stony, a shale in some places. There is a stone road all the way.

We reached Cleveland just as the lights were turned on and then drove 30 miles southeast to the little town, Burton. Here we stayed two nights with Florida friends and had the machine cleaned. Burton is a pretty little town situated on a hill. Three acres of grove are in the center with a wide road all around.

From there we struck southeast to Youngstown. It is a manufacturing town situated in a valley and on the hillsides. The view was beautiful along Monon Heights overlooking the city.

We crossed the Ohio River at Sewickly and stayed that night at Coryopolis where we reached the mountains. Then 12 miles on to Pittsburg.

It was so foggy and smoky that about all we saw of Pittsburg was smokestacks. In the city we crossed where the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers join to form the Ohio river. We followed the Monongahela for miles, most of the time clear above the telephone poles on the sides of the mountains. Here are mines every little ways.

At Monongahela City we began climbing the mountains, but soon struck one of the finest macadamized roads, wide enough for four autos to pass. It runs from Cumberland, Md., to Ohio and is called the Washington-Padoo Highway. This is the road taken in the revolution. They are endeavoring to macadamize it all the way up. On that high mountain and is some rich man's folly, a magnificent hotel with beautiful grounds.

At Somerfield there is a mammoth stone bridge built in 1712, also a stone hotel where Henry Clay died. Then on to Cumberland on Sunday. Right in the city is a very picturesque mountain, so straight up, so rough, so white I couldn't help but say "'Round the rough and ragged rock the ragged rascal ran." Only I don't think he could get around that one so easy.

We crossed the Potomac over covered bridge along by some hanging rocks which seemed hundreds of feet high and stopped at Romany. There are beautiful apples all through these mountains.

Then to Capon bridge and Winchester, Va. You see we did not keep anywhere near a straight road but they were mostly good ones. At Staunton we struck 38 miles of stone road called the Shanandoah Valley Pike, 46c toll and 42c to get into the city. So don't forget your pocketbook on this trip. The prisoners do the road work dressed in black and white stripes about 2 in. wide. They work the roads all the way to Florida and most of the way the roads are good.

The first 60 miles out of Roanoke is over a rolling red clay country, then hilly and mountainous with its hair-pin turns.

Soon we struck Martinsville, a nice town in the Blue Grass Country, with herds of cattle and horses. The roses were in bloom here and they claim the purest water in the world. It comes from white rock. Here are hospitals, sanatoriums and hotels—a health resort but it is surely nice.

At Salem, 1026 ft. above sea level, it is settled with Moravians. The women wear black bonnets and the girls dove colored ones not unlike our old-fashioned sunbonnets. The men wear wide rimmed hats and whiskers. They have good homes and fine horses. In their cemetery the marble slabs lie on the graves and here John Henry Bonner, the poet, is buried. The tavern still stands which was occupied by Washington in 1781. The old woolen mill, built in 1758, is still in operation. There are 135 factories here, manufacturing 205 classes of goods. This is in Forcythe county and it has over 100 miles of macadamized road.

WORDS THAT ARE ACCURSED.

To Use Them Before the Yezidees Is to Invite Death.

The Yezidees, a peculiar Turkish sect, are perhaps the only people in the world who consider certain letters, words and phrases as being cursed and the person who pronounces them a worthy subject for immediate destruction.

They attach no value to human life, and to these ordinary dangers are added those arising from the embarrassing etiquette of conversational intercourse with them, for if any one inadvertently speaks the word "devil," "satan" or anything with the same meaning be commits a mortal offense, and to cut off his head is a God pleasing act, a sacred duty of the Yezidee, the fulfillment of which will insure him a place in paradise.

In a like manner several letters are wholly banished from their language, chiefly those which contain the sound of "shun." The Arabian word "naliet," "Thou art damned," is also expunged because it is believed by the Yezidees to have been the word uttered by God when the fallen angels were thrown into hell.

These and similar words and phrases are set aside and combinations which do not belong to any language used instead.—London Spectator.

Skin Sufferers—Read!

We want all skin sufferers who have suffered for many years the tortures of disease and who have sought medical aid in vain, to read this.

We, as old established druggists of this community, wish to recommend to you a product that has given many relief and may mean the end of your agony. The product is a mild, simple wash, not a patent medicine concocted of various worthless drugs, but a scientific compound made of well known antiseptic ingredients. It is made in the D.D.D. laboratories of Chicago and is called the D.D.D. Prescription for Eczema.

The [illegible] of D. D. D. is to soothe instantly, as soon as applied; then it penetrates the pores, destroys and throws off all disease germs and leaves the skin clean and healthy.

We are so confident of the marvelous power of D. D. D. that we have taken advantage of the manufacturers guarantee, to offer you a full-size bottle on trial. You are to judge the merits of the remedy in your own particular case. If it doesn't help you, it costs you nothing.

D. D. D. Soap is made of the same healing ingredients. Ask us about it.

HEALS HORSE

Especially now when horses are getting more valuable, people in Michigan will find it to their profit to know about a 68-year old liniment about which Mr. H. O. Ferce of Trivoli, N. Y., writes as follows. "I healed several bad cuts and scraped hock on a valuable horse by using Hanford's Balsam of Myrrh twice a day." adv

HE SIMPLY FORGOT.

The Hurried Married Man Didn't Think, but His Wife Did.

He really meant to kiss his wife this morning as he left the house to go to work.

But he forgot. He was thinking of the cares of the shop, of the thousand and one matters which concern him in the big world with which he wrestles for a living for her and the kids.

Anyhow, he said to himself afterward, what's a kiss? It oughtn't to take such a mere formality to convince of his love and trust the woman he has made the mistress of his home, the mother of his children. Pshaw. The chances are she never noticed the omission. So why should he worry?

But back home a woman wept—wept not because she doubted her husband's constancy, not because she felt that he wouldn't prove big and true and fine in an emergency, but because, womanlike, shut within home's four walls, doomed to another day of petty routine, much of it to be endured all alone, she wanted that kiss as a token and a memory—wanted it as proof that not in her case could the poet write:

He's lost, you see, 'cause he married me;
Goodby, my lover, goodby.

Now if you, Mr. Man, made such a break as that this morning, do you know what you ought to do?

Go home tonight with a present in each hand and plant two kisses where one grew before.—New Orleans States.

An Everyday Cake

Here is a simple and inexpensive cake that can be varied in many ways with different frostings and icings. It looks a little nicer baked in a tube pan, but will be equally as good baked in a square loaf.

K C Gold Cake

By Mrs. Janet McKenzie Hill, Editor of the Boston Cooking School Magazine.

½ cup butter; 1 cup sugar; yolks of 4 eggs, beaten light; 1 cup flour, less 2 level tablespoonfuls; 2 level teaspoonfuls K C Baking Powder; ½ cup milk; grated rind of 1 orange.

Sift flour and baking powder together three times; cream butter and sugar, beat yolks of eggs, add these to creamed mixture, and lastly add the moisture and flour alternately, beating batter until smooth. Gold Cake can only be made successfully by beating yolks of eggs, very, very creamy and light lemon colored, using a rotary beater. The rotary beater is the only beater that will do justice to the yolks of eggs. The beating kills all egg taste—and improves the texture of the cake.

Cocoanut Frosting

Beat the whites of 2 eggs dry; gradually beat in half a cup of sifted confectioner's sugar and continue the beating until the frosting is smooth, thick and glossy; then beat in grated cocoanut, fresh or prepared, and spread upon the cake. This frosting is made thick by beating rather than by sugar.

Save this recipe. You will want to use it frequently. Or better, send us the colored certificate packed in each 25-cent can of K C Baking Powder and we will mail you "The Cook's Book" containing this and 89 other baking recipes equally good—all by Mrs. Hill. Jaques Mfg. Co., Chicago.

Perfection.

A man is one whose body has been trained to be the ready servant of his mind; whose passions are trained to be the servants of his will; who enjoys the beautiful, loves truth, hates wrong, loves to do good and respects others as himself.—Anon.

A Beatitude.

Blessed are the poor in pocket, for they shall be practised upon by physicians, sliced by surgeons, patronised by plutocratic philanthropists, purchased by politicians, researched by reformers, led about by lawyers, awed by authorities, exhorted by ecclesiastics, meddled with by ministers, explained by economists, and castigated by courts.—Life.

A DOOR WITHOUT A BOLT

The strongest oaken door that has no bolt adds to a house no element of strength and affords to its inmates no feeling of protection. A Bank without Conservatism resembles a door that has no bolt, lacking the essentials of conservatism and safety. This Bank is staid and conservative. It seeks the banking business of those whose primary requirement is safety. We perpetuate the best ideals of our state and offer to men and women courtesy coupled with conservatism.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE

Mrs. Mary Smeltzer has a birthday today, also she is entertaining the Farmers' club Her friends had planned a surprise for the occasion, and not to be disappointed they conceived the happy idea of having it a day ahead of time which they did with great success.

Mrs. Smeltzer and sister Miss Clara Bangs were preparing to attend the missionary meeting at the M. E. church when a sleighload of relatives drove in the back yard and while her niece Mrs. Howe entered the front door were getting ready to enter by the backway. Mrs. A. B. Bangs of Adrian was the first to enter and Mrs. S. slipped into her kimona to greet Mr. Bangs when lo and behold the backroom was full of guests. They say she wept, so they had to use two glasses to catch the tears of joy. The last one to greet her, was her daughter Mrs. McClure who had remained in the background then her surprise was complete

Several guests who were to come from Hudson being detained at home by sickness This did not prove an unlucky number however as the occasion proved a most delightful one Several beautiful gifts were presented Mrs. Smeltzer.

One of the features of the dinner was the large birthday cake with no matter how many tiny candles and a flag in the center, flags being the souvenirs of the day. The American flag was displayed throughout the house in decoration for the Farmers' club.

Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Bangs of Adrian and Mrs. Sam'l McClure of Erie, Pa, were the out-of-town guests. This was Mrs. Smeltzer's first surprise party and it certainly was all right,

CLINTON'S LAMB SUPPER

The lamb supper and entertainment at Clinton, which was held yesterday afternoon and evening, was a big success, about 1200 being served at supper in the Clintonian garage. One thousand lbs. of lamb and beef were used by the Clinton hosts to feed their guests. The hall was thrown open at 4:30 and it was nearly 9 o'clock before the last ones were served. The building proved far too small for the size of the crowd as they were forced to wait in line outside for their turn at the table.

There was speaking at the Town Hall in the afternoon and later at the garage after the supper was over. The speakers in the afternoon were W. D. VanTuyle and H. H. Halladay of Clinton, L. Whitney Watkins of Manchester and George Dumphy of Rochester. Gov. Ferris, who was advertised to speak, was unable to be present because of illness.

About 75 from Tecumseh were in attendance. Dancing in the evening at the Town Hall furnished amusement for a large proportion of the guests.

FENETTA SARGEANT HASKELL

The second of the C. W. Best series will be held at the Presbyterian church Monday evening Feb. 15 at 8 o'clock. Fenetta Sargeant Haskell, Dramatic reader will be the attraction of the evening.

MARTIN CROSSMAN

But a few short months ago we chronicled the death of Mrs. Martin Crossman who passed away last August. Today it is our sad duty to record the death of her husband Martin Crossman of Toledo, O., who passed away Feb. 10 at 6 o'clock p m. after an illness extending over several months he was 46 years of age. He leaves a daughter, Mrs. Leslie Bernritter, a son Henry, his mother Mrs, Annette Crossman and brother Truman of Tecumseh, a brother Frank of Jackson Charles of Detroit and a half brother Arthur Crossman of Omaha, Neb The funeral will be held at the home of L. D Dewey Saturday at 2 o'clock with burial in the family lot in Brookside.

Mr. Crossman was born in Tecumseh and spent his early years here, until his removal to Toledo, where he was employed as railroad detective, until his illness prevented his work. Two or three different times when he was rallied he has endeavored to be at his post but while the will was strung, the flesh was weak and he had to give it up and now all that is mortal of our friend, is at peaceful rest.

There will be an all day meeting of the Grange at their hall Saturday. Pot luck dinner at noon with a good program to follow.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Hicks left today for Carlsbad, New Mexico. Mr Hicks has accepted a position with the Jackson Auto Trailer Company and will establish agencies in New Mexico and Texas. He expects to be gone about three months or until the opening of the Lightning Rod season.

Next Sunday will be Local Option Field Day in Lenawee county. Over 60 churches will be visited by speakers and the funds will be raised for the campaign. The supreme court having adjourned until April, the case carried up by the Drys will not be reviewed in time for the election There is now no longer any doubt about the election taking place.

Last evening in the Presbyterian church parlors, the Juniors with their teacher Miss Edith Rector and her assistants, Mrs. Albert Deming and Miss Grace Gillespie, entertained the mothers of the little people very pleasantly. Miss Rector opened the program with a plea for more united work by the mothers and teachers. Then followed an excellent musical program by the children and Rev Rex delighted them with an illustrated talk on Mexico. A bounteous lunch was served by the youngsters and the guests expressed themselves well pleased with the affair.

VOGEL'S MINSTREL'S

John W. Vogel's Minstrels showed at Bradley opera house Tuesday night to a well filled house. We hear nothing but good words for the aggregation for every one seemed more than pleased. There was not a slow or uninteresting moment from the beginning of the first part to the close of the performance. The scenic effects were new and good.

The first part was crowded full of good singing, plenty of fun and jokes, And then an intermission of ten minutes.

The second part opened with a dancing number entitled "The Fox Hunt," followed by six good live feature acts. The work of Conroy and Denney in their comedy conversation and eccentric dancing was worthy of mention.

As advertised there were no tiresome waits, one act being followed by the next promptly without hindrance. Vogel's Minstrels made good their promise and will be welcomed in Tecumseh for a return engagement.

A street parade and concert were given Tuesday noon and a band concert in front of the opera house at 7 o'clock.

Models That Forecast the Summer Modes For This Type of Gown.

No summer season can be considered altogether complete in a sartorial sense without linen. Linen's great drawback is that it wrinkles easily, but even this defect cannot detract from the high estimation in which it is held by the majority of women. For the Palm Beach costume heavy white linen is combined with embroidered linen, and, following the fashion established last year, there are many attractive examples of colored linen frocks and suits.

A charming dress included in the wardrobe of a belle departing for southern resorts was made of light blue linen of medium weight. It exploited a skirt with a deep yoke, to which was hung the plaited lower section. These plaits had a one inch heading, and they were pressed flatly from top to bottom.

The blouse was fastened with black satin buttons quite to the throat, where there appeared a choker of soft white linen covered with embroideries. The long sleeves had narrow cuffs of the embroidered linen, and the essential belt was introduced in one of black patent leather.

To go with this dress was a hat of fine white straw, faced with black satin. Its shape inclined to poke outlines, turned up at the back to show a narrow bandeau of pin roses.

A TWICE-TOLD TALE

One of Interest to Our Readers.

Good news bears repeating, and when it is confirmed after a long lapse of time, even if we hesitated to believe it at first hearing, we feel secure in accepting its truth now. The following experience of a Tecumseh man is confirmed after several years.

W. W. Shurtz, Kilbuck St., Tecumseh, says: "I have taken Doan's Kidney Pills at different times during the past ten years and they have always given me relief from distressing symptoms of kidney complaint. I have procured my supply of Doan's Kidney Pills from Wright & Son's Drug store and my experience has been so satisfactory that I willingly give this public account for it. SEEING THE SUN.

A Traveler's Experience Among the Natives of Manchuria.

In "Thirty Years In Mukden" Dr. Dugald Christie tells the following story of an experience that he and the Rev. John MacIntyre underwent on a trip they took from Mukden to the river Yalu, the border of Korea. On their way back they found themselves toward dusk one day in a sparsely inhabited district several miles from the only inn. They reached it by fording a swift river swollen with melting snows and found a poor hovel with only one common room and two old men as innkeepers.

"There was neither candle nor lamp, but the end of a tarred rope that hung from a beam was burning, and by this dim light I looked at my watch," says Mr. Christie.

"'What is that toy?' asked one of the old men.

"'It tells the time,' I answered.

"'What time? What do you mean by time?'

"'It shows where the sun is.'

"Turning to his brother, he asked in a puzzled way: 'But the sun's down long ago. How can be tell where it is?'

"'Ai-ya!' said the brother, with awe. 'He can still see it in the glass. What can these foreigners not do?'

"Early the next morning we were astir, preparing to go on. As our horses were being saddled the old man questioned us again:

"'How far away is your country?'

"'Many thousand miles.'

"'And did you ride all the way on that horse?'"

NEWSPAPERS IN INDIA.

They Seem to Be Run In a Happy-go-lucky Sort of Way.

Americans, accustomed to the hustle and bustle of our newspapers that are enterprising to a marvelous extent, would be amazed if not exasperated with the papers of India. One of these sheets recently published this explanation:

"This is only the beginning of our paper. We were not sure how much matter was required to fill it up, and, thinking we had sufficient, we did not exert ourselves much to get any more. We therefore beg that our readers will excuse us for the space left blank and promise to do better and get more in the future."

How many subscribers would that paper have in this country? Still more curious was the announcement of a paper that came out with two columns blank, the editor having the cheek to say that a large quantity of exceedingly interesting matter has been left out for want of space.

When the average East Indian editor wants a holiday he suspends publication until it is convenient to resume and, taking the public into his confidence, informs them plainly why the paper was not issued on the expected dates. "With the consent of our readers we now propose to take our annual holiday. We are sure none of them will begrudge us our relaxation."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

CATARRH OF KIDNEYS AND BLADDER

Peruna Saved Me

Mrs. Powers, whose address is given below her portrait, is an ardent friend of Peruna. She says:

"I am thankful to tell you that my old trouble has never bothered me any since you received my testimonial. Any one wishing to know the facts in my case, if they will write me I will be glad to answer. Your medicine has saved me, and gave me perfect health. I frequently meet friends that knew me when I was in poor health. They ask me what has made such a change in me. I always tell them that it was the nerve remedy, Peruna. I shall praise Peruna as long as I live."

Catarrh of the Internal Organs

Mrs. A. T. Powers, R. R. 7, Box 121, London, Ohio, writes: "I write to thank you for the wonderful good your Peruna has done for me. I was a sufferer from kidney and bladder trouble for twenty-two years. Two years ago I began to take Peruna, and I only took about three bottles and today I can say I am a well person."

Catarrh is liable to affect any of the internal organs. This is especially true of the bladder, which is very frequently the seat of catarrh. This is sometimes called cystitis

Mr. James M. Powell, No. 1620 W. Walnut St., Rosedale, Kansas, writes: "About four years ago I suffered with a severe catarrh of the bladder, which caused continued irritation and pain. I was miserable and could not stand up or walk for any length of time without extreme weariness and pain. I began taking Peruna and it greatly relieved me and in eleven weeks I was completely cured, and felt like a new man."

Those who object to liquid medicine can now procure Peruna in Tablet form.

"I saw Vinol advertised and decided to try it, and within two weeks I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and now I am a well woman."—Mrs. ANA BECKER, Collinsville, Ill.

There are hundreds of nervous, run-down, overworked women in this vicinity who are hardly able to drag around and who we are sure would be wonderfully benefited by Vinol as Mrs. Becker was.

The reason Vinol is so successful in building up health and strength in such cases is because it combines the medicinal tissue building and curative elements of cod's livers together with the blood making, strengthening properties of tonic iron. We ask every weak, nervous, run-down man or woman in this vicinity to try a bottle of Vinol on our guarantee to return their money if it fails to benefit.

Heloise Durand

She Became an Object For National Protection

By MARIAN KNOX

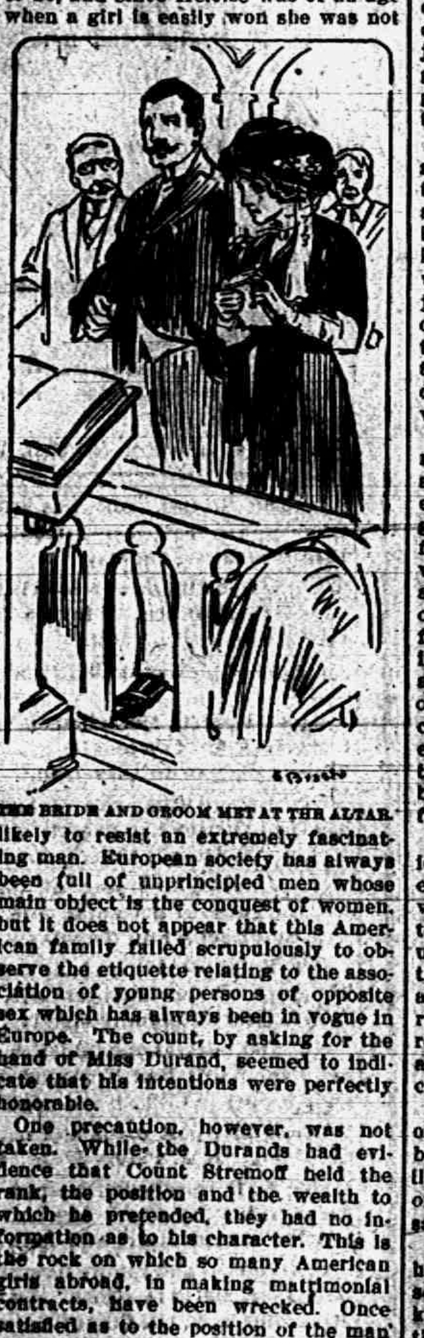
The Riviera is a favorite place for the aristocracy of Europe to winter, especially Russians, who are often glad to escape the snow and ice and cold winds of that bleak empire. Nice, Mentone and other points on the Mediterranean sea are during the months of December, January and February thronged with people, who find there both a balmy climate and gayety.

About the middle of the nineteenth century an American girl gifted not only with beauty, but a remarkable histrionic genius, seventeen years old, was visiting the Riviera with her mother and brother. One afternoon while walking on the promenade on the Mediterranean shore the party met among the throng of idlers a tall, handsome young man whose light hair and blue eyes marked him for a northerner. As he passed the girl his gaze was fixed upon her with admiration, while she lowered her gaze to the ground.

These two were real personages, but since this is a story rather than an account we will call the girl Heloise Durand and the man Count Stremoff. The latter was a young Russian, a member of one of the most aristocratic families of St. Petersburg. He lost no time in discovering who was the girl of such striking appearance he had met and in looking for some one to introduce him to her.

He was successful in making her acquaintance, and then began a courtship which would likely have but one ending for so young a girl courted by a nobleman handsome as a picture and possessing the most charming manners. Satan is pictured with cloven feet and a disagreeable countenance. But his most effective work is done under the guise of beauty. The two [illegible] enjoyed at Nice, promenaded on the sea walk and were together in sailing parties on the blue waters of the Mediterranean. And all this while the count was pouring into her ear his tale of love.

The Durands were satisfied that the count's position was all he claimed it to be, and since Heloise was of an age when a girl is easily won she was not likely to resist an extremely fascinating man. European society has always been full of unprincipled men whose main object is the conquest of women, but it does not appear that this American family failed scrupulously to observe the etiquette relating to the association of young persons of opposite sex which has always been in vogue in Europe. The count, by asking for the hand of Miss Durand, seemed to indicate that his intentions were perfectly honorable.



THE BRIDE AND GROOM MET AT THE ALTAR.

One precaution, however, was not taken. While the Durands had evidence that Count Stremoff held the rank, the position and the wealth to which he pretended, they had no information as to his character. This is the rock on which so many American girls abroad, in making matrimonial contracts, have been wrecked. Once satisfied as to the position of the man they want, they are not likely to pay any attention to what he is in himself. The catalogue of Americans who have married titled foreigners to their cost is large, and still it grows.

Count Stremoff being a Russian, any marriage he might make was amenable to Russian law. That law explicitly required that a marriage should take place in the Russian or Greek church and in accordance with its ceremonies. There was no Russian church on the Riviera, and it was arranged that the couple be married at the consulate. The wedding took place, putting Miss Durand in the paradoxical position of being Stremoff's legal wife, while he was not her legal husband.

It was arranged that the Durands and the count should go to Paris, where there was a Greek church, and they could be married according to the Russian law. Stremoff preceded the others. It was then the Lenten season, when no marriage can be celebrated in the Greek church. This the count doubtless knew. Nevertheless, he departed, ostensibly to make preparations for the celebration of the wedding.

When the Durands reached Paris they discovered the fact that the marriage making Heloise the legal wife in Russia as well as other countries could not be completed for some weeks. And now the count showed his true character. He used all his persuasive powers to induce the young girl to go away with him, assuring her that she was his legal wife.

"Go with me," he pleaded, "to Russia, where we can be married according to the requirements of the Greek church, where I will be at home and where my family may attend the wedding. Here we must pass dreary weeks waiting, while there we can be united at once."

This was not true. No couple could be married in the Greek church during Lent in Russia any more than in Paris. The girl protested, but in vain. Stremoff seemed determined, and, becoming fearful of his integrity, not daring to keep the secret longer, Heloise told her mother of his solicitations.

At the same time rumors came to Mrs. Durand that Stremoff was a rake and a prodigate, without any sense of honor whatever. Fortunately the Durands were relatives of the American minister at St. Petersburg, and the mother wrote him with reference to the marriage and the rumors she had heard. The ambassador wrote her to come at once to the capital.

The fact of having the influence of one of so much importance at the Russian court makes this episode in real life one of the remarkable stories of the world. Mrs. Durand and the young bride—the latter assumed the title and name of Countess Stremoff—went to Russia and stayed at the American embassy. They were informed by the count's brother that he was a villain and that they had better have nothing further to do with him.

Stremoff while drawing a young American girl into his toils had no idea that she had the opportunity of calling to her aid the power of the United States. Her cousin, the ambassador, took the matter as an indignity to an American citizen to the Russian government and asked for redress for the young countess. The result of his representations was an arrangement between the two powers that the pair be officially married at Warsaw, in Russian Poland. The count, who by this time had thrown off the mask, showing that he had intended to make Miss Durand his dupe, refused to go to Warsaw or be married.

And here comes in among the wrongs that may be perpetrated by despotic power a case of right. Probably no other sovereign, no head of a republic surely, would have been able to compel this rascal to do justice to the girl he had intended to win for the purpose of deserting her when won, except the czar of Russia.

One day Stremoff rec[illegible] an official document from the czar ordering him to go to Warsaw and complete the marriage that he had begun on the Riviera. An order from the autocrat of all the Russias to one of his subjects is not to be despised. One who by a nod can send persons, without the semblance of a trial, to work in the dreaded mines in Siberia is not likely to be disobeyed when he directs a man to do justice to a woman. And the wronged girl had behind her the power of the great American republic to re-enforce the czar.

Count Stremoff dared not disobey his sovereign's order, and at the appointed time the so called wedding party met at the church, the bride wearing a black dress, attended by her father, her mother and the groom's brother, who had been very kind to the injured girl. The father had concealed on his person a revolver, determined that if the villain refused to convey the necessary legal rights to his daughter he would at least prevent his working any more mischief.

The bride and groom met at the altar rail. Probably no more dramatic scene, certainly no more unique one, ever was enacted in a church. The groom was simply passing through a form in obedience to the will of one who held over him the power of life and death; the bride was enduring an ordeal to make her a legal wife. But for her it was a terrible crisis, knowing as she did that her father was armed and at the slightest disposition on the part of the groom to recede the ceremony would be turned into a tragedy. She must have prayed silently there before the altar that she might be spared a bloody ending of her misfortune.

The priest began the marriage service, all save the bride keeping their eyes fixed on the count, wondering by what loophole, if any, he might attempt to escape what was to be forced upon him. To all, especially the bride, the service seemed interminable. But at last it was ended, and Heloise Durand had become legally as well as really the Countess Stremoff. The bride and groom parted at the door of the church, never to meet again.

The Americans fled from Russia at once, for by the Russian law the husband can imprison, beat, in every way ill treat his wife if he can get his hands on her. They reached the border the same day and were safe.

What became of the groom, whether he continued his villainy or had bee sobered by this one experience, is no known. The wedding took place more than half a century ago, and his name, save for this episode, wherein he showed his villainy, has sunk into oblivion. Not so his wife. She became one of the world's famous actresses. Yet of all the dramas in which she ever played it is questionable if any was so truly dramatic as the one in which she had played the real, the principal role in the days of her early youth.

ALCOR, THE DOUBLE STAR.

Much Brighter Now Than It Was In the Tenth Century.

The two stars, Mizar and Alcor, form a double star system which can easily be perceived by the naked eye. This was not the case formerly, as the Arab used the resolution of the system into its two components as a test for good eyes.

It would seem, therefore, that this star has increased in brightness since the tenth century, a supposition which is supported by the fact that it is not mentioned by the ancients.

The history of this star was familiar to astronomers when it was found, in 1907, that Alcor is itself a double star. It is now discovered by Harlow Shapley that Alcor varies in brightness, the variations having a feeble amplitude and a short period. The spectrum type of Alcor, which is a star A5—that is to say, a white star with hydrogen predominating and the doubling of the lines—announces a variation of the Algol type, by eclipse rather than continuous variation.

It is supposed that there exists a couple of elliptic stars very close together and inclined on their orbit in such a way that the mutual eclipse is feeble or almost nothing, the variations of brightness resulting from their marked ellipticity.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The question of Mr. Wilson's own candidacy, it was said, was not discussed, although it was agreed that much of the material for the campaign will be based on his record.

A Fine Sight.

The men of a certain regiment had made some complaints respecting the scarcity of food, but the colonel, a strong believer in the go away from the table hungry maxim, saw no grounds for increasing the supply.

The gunnery instructor had one day been explaining to a squad of men the advantage of different sights, when the colonel appeared on the scene and began asking questions on the subject.

"Can any of you men tell me what a fine sight is?"

"Yes, sir," replied a private

"Well, what is it?"

The private saluted. "Two dinners, sir, on one plate!" he cried.—London Mirror.

Birth of Music.

There are many legends concerning the origin of music, but it is impossible to say which is the oldest. By the old Romans the god Mercury was credited with the invention of music. According to Apollodorus, the belief was as follows: The Nile after an overflow left on the shore a dead tortoise. Its flesh was finally dried up by the hot sun, so that nothing remained in the shell but the cartilages, which, being braced and contracted by the heat, became sonorous. Mercury, happening to be walking that way and striking his foot against the shell, was so pleased with the sound produced that the idea of a lyre presented itself to his imagination. He immediately constructed the instrument in the form of a tortoise and strung it with the sinews of dead animals. And so music began.

The Lost Repeater.

When Monsieur the first Monsieur at the court of Louis XIV. discovered at his levee that his watch had been stolen, presumably by one of his valets, he finished dressing hastily and, addressing them all, said: "Gentlemen, the watch strikes. Let us separate as quickly as we can." What a tact and finish were here!

The spirit of Monsieur was admirably caught by the French gentleman of the time who, attacked by robbers at 6 o'clock in the afternoon, simply observed, "Sirs, you have opened very early today."—Cornhill Magazine.

STOLEN CHILD FOILS MAN ABDUCTING HER

Willard Gagnier Is Taken at Instance of Victim.

Detroit, Mich., Feb. 15.—The arrest of Willard Gagnier, alleged kidnaper of ten year old Elsie Streicher of Wyandotte, was brought about by the girl herself, when the child told the story of her abduction and subsequent detention in Toronto. Elsie gave the credit of her escape to Mrs. Joseph McMullen of Toronto, to whose home Gagnier took her when they arrived in Toronto.

Despite alleged threats made by Gagnier, Elsie refused to keep silent. Secretly she told Mrs. McMullen that he was not her father as he represented, and that he had kidnaped her. Before this, however, she had unsuccessfully endeavored to write to her parents, or telling a policeman, Gagnier having frustrated her attempts, she declared.

She gave Mrs. McMullen her address, asking her to notify her parents, and it was on receipt of Mrs. McMullen's letter that Mrs. Streicher notified the authorities that her daughter was in Toronto. A deputy sheriff sent there apprehended Gagnier, with the help of the Toronto police.

"We did not know that Gagnier was a former convict," said Miss Florence Streicher, sister of the little girl. "He told us he had served in the army, whereas we now learn that he had served in a penitentiary. We knew his parents several years ago, and they were very fine people, but we knew little about Gagnier."

Berlin, Feb. 15.—(By wireless to Sayville.)—The whole Russian general staff in Bukowina has been captured and the commanding general has committed suicide, according to dispatches printed in the Budapest Daily Azest.

According to the Azest the Russians were surprised in the town of Raudats and orders for a hasty retreat were given. The Austrian onslaught broke through the hastily prepared defense of the Russians. When the commanding general, whose name is not known, saw capture was inevitable, he killed himself. Other members of the staff then surrendered.

Vienna reports deny reports of rioting and dynamiting in Prague. It also has been learned that Prague will soon issue 5 per cent national defense bonds at 96 redeemable at par in 1925. The bonds will be free from taxation.

Germans Bombard Nieuport.

Paris, Feb. 15.—The afternoon war office statement says: "In Belgium the bombardment of Nieuport, of our trenches in the dunes and of the city of Ypres continued. Our artillery delivered a counter bombardment of the enemy's batteries. From the Lys to the Aisne there were intermittent connonades. Near Uoulette, a detachment of the enemy which attempted to advance upon our trenches, was stopped short by the fire of our infantry. In Champagne there has been quite intense activity on the part of the enemy's artillery upon our front before Rheims. The city has been again bombarded. Our fire upon the German trenches appears to have accomplished good results. From the Argonne to the Moselle the day was calm.

"In Lorraine German forces moved against those of our advanced elements, which occupy the signal station of Xon, northeast of Pont-a-Mouson. The results of the battle are not yet known.

"In Alsace the enemy has taken the offensive through the valley of the Lauch, with two columns, advancing along the north and south banks of the river. The march of these troops is reported to have been delayed and impeded by our ski patrols. They are now in contact with our most advanced line.

Germans Take Village.

Berlin, Feb. 15.—(Via London.)—The official statement issued by the German headquarters says: "To the north of Pont-a-Mouson we took the village of Norroy from the French and we also captured hill 365, situated to the west of that village. Two officers and 151 men were taken prisoners. In the Vosges we stormed Wilsen and Obersengern, where we took 135 prisoners.

"In the eastern theater—on the other side of the East Prussian frontier—our operations are taking the course we anticipated. In Poland, on the right bank of the Vistula, our troops are making progress in the direction of Racions. In Poland, on the left bank of the Vistula, there is no change to report."

In the meantime the government is buying up all the available copper. The bells will be taken over as a last resort.

BELIEVE CAPLAN HAS BEEN SLAIN

William J. Burns Tells of Arrest of Schmidt.

CRIMES TO BE UNCOVERED?

Telegram From Los Angeles Hints That One of Accused Dynamiters Has Been Murdered—Efforts Will Be Made to Induce the Prisoner to Talk.

New York, Feb. 15.—From the day that Detective Wm. J. Burns was selected to run down the dynamiters of the Los Angeles Times building four years ago last fall, he and his operatives, Mr. Burns says, searched steadily for not only the McNamaras, but for David Caplan and Matthew A. Schmidt, the man that Mr. Burns and Acting Captain Deevy arrested in Lincoln square Saturday night.

One gathers also, although Mr. Burns does not say so in so many words, that a slight blunder was made in arresting Schmidt on a charge of homicide Saturday night, the complaint being that he was one of the men directly concerned in the dynamiting of the Times building when twenty-one employes of the newspaper were killed.

Burns Wants Caplan.

For months, Mr. Burns says, his men have had Schmidt in sight and could have locked him up at any time. The reason they didn't pick Schmidt up long ago was that the Burns men also wanted to get Caplan. It was thought that the man with Schmidt Saturday was Caplan and the error was not discovered until the arrest was made.

While Burns was talking a telegram came to him signed by the district attorney and sheriff at Los Angeles saying that deputies were being sent east to bring Schmidt to California.

Suspect Caplan Murdered.

A dispatch was also received which said that if Schmidt has guilty knowledge and will "come through" he can stir things up on the west coast.

The California message to Burns said that "If Caplan has been murdered" Schmidt, if he can be induced to talk, not only can name the murderers, but can connect up several names of men thought to have been implicated in the labor dynamitings, but against whom there is not sufficient evidence at present.

PATMONT FINDS ALIBI IN ARSON ACCUSATION

After 2,000 Mile Chase Another Confesses Deed.

Denver, Colo., Feb. 15—After a 2,000 mile chase, begun in Brooklyn a month ago, the Rev. Louis R. Patmont, Christian clergyman, who was kidnaped in Westville, Ill., and held captive fifty-one days, has run down another minister here and forced him to confess that he burned Christ's chapel in Newark, N. J., April 10, 1913, for which crime Patmont is now under indictment.

Patmont obtained the confession and an affidavit from the man, who was the Rev. Macar Lubich, after a foot race through a raging snow storm which ended when Patmont felled the other with a blow of his fist.

Lubich, in his confession, said he had set fire to the church in order to collect $1,000 insurance from the Newark Fire Insurance company. For this crime Patmont, on the sworn statement of his former wife, was indicted.

Lubich also admitted he had stolen clothes from Patmont in New York six years ago, where Lubich arrived from Russia, a destitute clergyman.

Armed with the affidavit, Patmont left this evening to go to Columbia, Mo., to obtain affidavits in connection with his pursuit of his kidnapers of last year. He then will go to Newark.

Crossed Valentines

They Brought a Surprise on the Good Saint's Day

By CLARISSA MACKIE

"If I had known you could be so hateful!" Milly Telford had sobbed.

"If I had only known you had such a waspish temper!" Harry Blake had hotly retorted.

And that was the beginning of the few bitter words that ended their engagement.

So Milly hastened to pack her trunk and run away to Fern Hollow, where her Aunt Amelia Telford lived the quiet, uneventful days of a New England spinster.

"Broken your engagement to Harry Blake?" echoed Aunt Amelia when Milly had made confession.

"Yes," sighed Milly. "And, Aunt Amelia, I'm so thankful that I discovered my mistake in time!"

"I hope, dear, that you won't regret it," said Aunt Amelia, with a troubled expression in her sweet blue eyes.

"I never shall! And, Aunt Amelia," added Milly brightly, "I'm never going to marry. I'm going to spend my days a happy, care free spinster like you!"

Aunt Amelia went away without a word, and if Milly had followed she would have seen the little woman looking wistfully across the valley at the red chimneys of an old graystone house set against the wintry hillsides. If she had had more faith in the lover of her youth that graystone house would have been her home today.

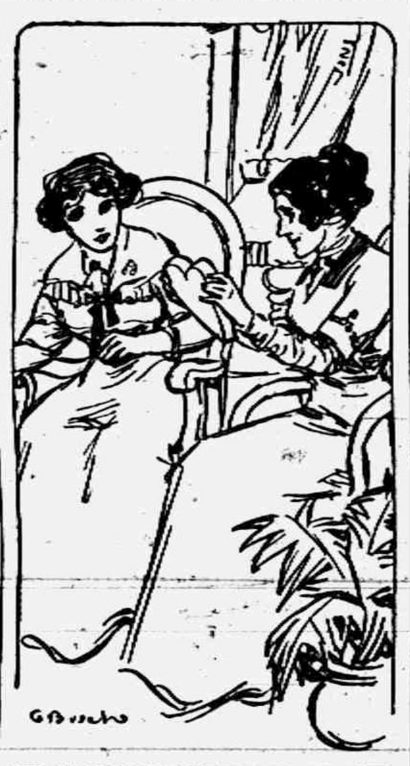
"Poor child—poor foolish child!" she murmured sadly, and one could not tell whether she pitied her niece Milly or the spirit of her own lost youth.

• • • • • • •

The window of the little stationery shop was gay with love missives. They hung from wires in long strings or were fixed cunningly in place by hidden props at the back.

Valentines, valentines, everywhere. They cluttered the glass showcases and were festooned overhead in a riot of alluring color.

Outside it was snowing fast, and Milly Telford in her scarlet coat and knitted cap made a brilliant flash of color as she ran up the steps of Mr. Ware's shop and opened the door.



AMELIA READ THE LINES OVER AND OVER.

Mr. Ware, having dismissed his last customer, hurried forward to meet her.

"I want some drawing pencils, please," said Milly, approaching the glass case.

"Valentines!"

Milly's breath came faster as the tender missives stared her in the face. "I forgot it was St. Valentine's day," she murmured, with an odd little laugh.

"When I was a young man girls didn't forget St. Valentine's day," said Mr. Ware reprovingly.

Milly laughed lightly. "There are so many things to think about," she apologized. Then, having purchased her pencils, she lingered, looking over the valentines. If she had not quarreled with Harry—why, she would undoubtedly be selecting a valentine for him and he would send her some ridiculously sweet remembrance of the day and she would pretend that she could not guess the sender.

"It isn't too late to buy some now, Miss Milly," wheedled Mr. Ware across the counter. "'Tain't Valentine's day till tomorrow."

"I'll take some of these cute little hearts," said Milly. "I've quite forgotten my sister's children."

While Mr. Ware slipped the hearts into envelopes ready for direction, Milly hovered over a dainty satin valentine on which was painted a wreath of forgetmenots, and within the wreath was a verse lettered in gold:

Though bitter pride holds us apart,
Thy image lingers in my heart.

It seemed to be a verse written for estranged lovers. Milly Telford's heart beat quickly as she took out her purse and paid for the white satin valentine. She evaded Mr. Ware's kindly, quizzical glance as she hastened from the place. Up in her own little room at Aunt Amelia's Milly examined the valentine once more before inclosing it in its box and wrapping it securely.

At last it lay before her, a dainty package wrapped in white paper. She carried it into the spare bedroom where on the old fashioned writing desk Aunt Amelia kept her writing materials.

Milly smiled a little as she lighted the candle and heated the stick of red sealing wax. Aunt Amelia's ivory handled seal was there, and Milly used it, afterward holding the clear cut impression to the light. Against the red wax was the impression of a sailing ship tossing on a stormy sea; underneath in tiny letters it read, "Such is life."

Then in a laboriously disguised hand Milly wrote Harry Blake's name with some of Aunt Amelia's violet ink. "I will address it to the house; he will surely receive it then," murmured Amelia, blushing hotly.

• • • • • • •

It was Miss Amelia Telford's morning custom to walk demurely down the village street and call at the postoffice for her mail and then do her marketing for the day. St. Valentine's day was no exception to the rule, and when Miss Amelia walked up the prim path to her front door she carried a handful of letters and newspapers. Milly was waiting with thinly disguised impatience in the cozy sitting room.

"Any mail for me, Aunt Amelia?" she asked.

"Yes, a box of candy from some one," laughed Amelia.

Milly snatched up the big box of sweets, and the look of eager anticipation died from her face as she scanned the address.

"Oh! It's only from Billy Wakeman," she said carelessly, pushing it aside.

Amelia removed her cloak and hat and sat down to look over the mail that had come to her. She read several letters with quiet enjoyment, then picked up a large square white missive heavily embossed.

"A valentine for me!" she cried, with gentle excitement. She carefully opened the envelope with her embroidery scissors and drew out a large white satin heart, on which was painted a smaller heart of forgetmenots. In the center of the small heart was a verse in gold lettering:

Though bitter pride holds us apart,
Thy image lingers in my heart.

Amelia read the lines over and over with trembling lips that refused to utter more than a whisper. Then she bowed her head, where the crinkled bronze tresses were mingled with a powdering of white, and she wept softly.

Milly crept to her and listened to the old story of a lovers' quarrel extending over many years, and now of the valentine which had come as an olive branch of peace from her old lover.

"It was so unexpected, my dear," sobbed Aunt Amelia. "I never expected to hear from Henry Blake again."

"Henry Blake?" echoed Milly, picking up the embossed envelope and scanning the address. She knew the bold masculine hand that had penned the words, giving her the formal name by which she had been christened as Aunt Amelia's namesake:

"Miss Amelia Telford, Fern Hollow, N. H."

That was Aunt Amelia's name too! How funny that her aunt should have thought the valentine was for her—from her old sweetheart! Of course it was for the young Milly, from Harry himself!

"Just fancy one valentine doing for two of us!" thought Milly ecstatically. Then, with sudden thought, she added: "You said his name was Henry Blake, Aunt Amelia?"

Amelia lifted her tear wet eyes; she was smiling happily. "His name is Henry Blake, and he is your Harry Blake's uncle. Of course I never told you that I knew him when he lived in the old stone house across the valley. I never expected this"— She was holding the valentine close to her heart.

"How odd!" breathed Milly incredulously. "And Harry lives with his Uncle Henry, you know; they keep bachelors' hall in the most delightful apartment—and, dear, there is the doorbell."

Milly flew to the front door to admit the tall, dignified form of Mr. Henry Blake. "Why, Milly!" he cried cordially, clasping her hand. "I—er—came—er"— Milly saw that in one hand he carried a flat package wrapped in white paper with broken red seals.

"You came to see Aunt Amelia," smiled Milly, as she pushed him toward the sitting room door. "I know all about it," she nodded wisely.

"You do?" he laughed. "Then you can see that I recognized Amelia's seal and her violet ink. But that rascal Harry fought to the last ditch that it was intended for him. This duplicating family names is a nuisance."

"It's a blessing in disguise sometimes," giggled Milly as he disappeared within the sitting room.

Ten minutes later Milly was in the village drug store talking over the telephone to Harry Blake in New York.

"Did you send me a valentine, Harry?" she asked, and when he answered in the affirmative she told him enough of the story to bring him down to Fern Hollow by the next train.

Conspicuous among the wedding presents received by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Blake were two valentines, almost alike in design and each bearing the same trite little couplet. Attached were the cards of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Blake.

"Those valentines," explained the bride to her dearest friend, "are proof to me that St. Valentine in truth keeps a watchful eye on his people. Almost identical, they crossed each other in transit and brought happiness to four people—and that's expecting a good deal from two valentines!"

The English Three R's.

A Frenchman had been on a visit to England in order to study at first hand the social manners of the English people.

On returning to his native land he was asked by a friend whether he had discovered the meaning of the mysterious "three R.'s."

"Oh, I found out what they were on the first day of my visit!" said he.

"And what are they, then?"

"Rippin', rotten and right-o!" replied the triumphant Frenchman.—London Mail.

Youthful Escapades of Tolstoy.

Tolstoy's sister, Marie, related that one day at the hour of luncheon he succeeded in eluding the vigilance of his tutor in order to carry into execution a project he had long had in view. This was to jump out of the window into the courtyard, a distance of fifteen feet below. The boy did it and providentially did not break any bones, but the shock was so great that he slept afterward for eighteen hours. Nothing caused Tolstoy the boy more annoyance about this time than the knowledge that he was very plain featured. To be revenged on nature he determined to make himself still uglier and with this end in view cut off his eyebrows.

The Emergency Ration.

The emergency ration tastes better than it sounds, and to its composition has gone as much thought as in the choice of a rifle. The conditions it has to fulfil are many and onerous. First, its food value must be high, for it has not only to keep a soldier alive, but in good fighting trim. It must be palatable, hot or cold, light in weight and must not deteriorate under any conditions of service or climate for two years. The British emergency ration has a basis of chocolate with an admixture of some milk proteid; it weighs six ounces and a half, is "tasty," cooked or raw, and will keep a man going well for thirty-six hours.—London Spectator.

ON TO FLORIDA.

Conclusion of letter written from Grand Island, Fla., by Mrs. Alf. Linn to her brother Chas. Lowe of Ridgeway.

Then on to Charlotte, N. C., crossing the Yadkin river. The county line sign is half way across the bridge. We paid 25c toll here.

At Salisbury is located the Stonewall Jackson training school for wayward boys. Here is the site of a confederate prison and near by is a National cemetery where lie 1200 of our "Boys in Blue." It was once noted as a mining center.

Charlotte is the county seat of Mecklenburg county. Here the Declaration of Independence is supposed to have been signed May 21, 1775, and there is a monument commemorating this in the courtyard. Another tablet shows Cornwall's headquarters. He called Charlotte a hornet's nest. It is said Jeff Davis was standing in front of this court house addressing the people when he was handed a telegram that Lincoln was assassinated. Presidents Polk, Jackson and Tyler lived here. The old U. S. mint is located in this city and is used as an assay office. Daniel Boone lived a short distance from here on the Yadkin river which is about ½ mile wide and very muddy.

We went nearly west from Charlotte over a rolling clay country. The chief products are tobacco and cotton—not as much tobacco as I expected, but cotton everywhere.

We went around King's Mt. to Spartonsburg. It has iron and gold mines and mineral springs and is a large manufacturing town. About 10 miles from here the Battle of Cowpens was fought Jan. 17, 1781, when the Americans were victorious over the British.

At Duncan we found some Michigan people and camped. It rained all next day, our first unpleasant weather. We started out the second day in the rain O, such sticky roads! We might better have waited until it got dry. So beware if you ever take the trip.

At Fairplay we stayed all night. I met a lady teacher here by the name of Elma [illegible] grandfather came from Pomfort, England, (that is where Grandma came from) and that her aunt had spent a lot of money in trying to find a lost branch of the family who came to America. She thought that Grandma was the one from what I told her.

We crossed the Savannah into Georgia and then on to Atlanta. It is situated on the crest of the hills that make the watershed, one to the Gulf and the other to the Atlantic. The city has 150 miles of macadam. Everything shows enterprise. It has all been built since the war, as you will remember Sherman burned the city on his march to the sea.

We traveled over the same road to Macon. It's the same rolling red clay all the way. The buildings in the country are mostly small. The principal crops are cotton and some corn

At Valdosta we struck the turpentine pine and sand. Here the long staple cotton is grown to Liveoak, Fla. They claim it don't do well farther north. It is used for thread. There is cotton all the way from the north of North Carolina to Liveoak, Florida.

At Gainsville we saw the state schools, some very nice buildings. The fair was just on so we had to wait for the parade of the schools.

It was very dark when we reached Grand Island. I have tried to tell you a little that I saw but it's only a small part. As ever

YOUR SISTER,

G. A. R. and T. B. A.

The entertainment given by the G. A. R. and T. B. A. Monday evening was attended by the largest crowd ever gathered in their rooms. The whole program was given as published in our last issue. The address of Burton L. Hart of Adrian on "Lincoln and his Family" was of marked interest.

The Ladies' Glee Club of Macon gave several fine selections. The soloists, Mrs Billings, John Pennington and Ernest Church, were each at their best, the gentlemen responding to encores. The whole evening was a great success.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend our thanks to the many friends who came to assist us during our recent bereavement, to the singers and pastor for the words of comfort, also for the many beautiful flowers so lovingly tendered.

A Question of Fact.

The judge decided that certain evidence was inadmissible. Counsel took strong exception to the ruling and insisted that it was admissible.

"I know, your honor," said counsel warmly, "that it is proper evidence. Here I have been practicing at the bar for forty years, and now I want to know if I am supposed to be a fool?"

"That," quietly replied the judge, "is a question of fact and not of law, so I won't pass any opinion upon it, but will let the jury decide."

Middy Blouses.

It may not be amiss to speak of the middy blouses which give such great freedom of movement to the arms for the girl who likes to row or play tennis or golf. For spring there are middies of biscuit color linens, as well as the more familiar sort of white, and the collar and sleeve trimmings may be of any preferred contrasting color. Rather distinctive are the models with hand embroidered insignia on sleeve and shield.

Pongees In Neutral Tones.

The great vogue of putty and sand tones has been responsible for the revival of pongee, which has not been in good fashion repute for several seasons. Both suits and dresses are being made of that serviceable fabric, mostly in tailored or demi tailored effects. Of course this means that the motor coat of pongee will come in for a renewed share of attention.

High School Notes.

ATHLETIC DUES DUE

The advent of the Base ball season was announced Thursday morning by the inscription, "Athletic Dues Due," which was written on the board and signed with the initials of the A. A. treasurer. (Twenty-five cents, please)

At the same time, there appeared the announcement, "Base ball candidates meet in Lab 3:15." About twenty presented themselves, and helped elect "Chuck" Underwood, captain of the base ball team, and "Mac" McNeil, captain of the track team.

Prospects are fairly good; provided that everyone turns out for practice every night, and not one night in three, also that every student give their support (pecuniary especially) to the team, which we feel sure will do their best.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE

It is difficult to decide who enjoyed the Institute at Adrian most, the teacher by going, (?) or the pupils by having them go.

GERMANS STORM ROOM 10

The Sophomores must have thought the whole state of Germany had swooped down upon them, judging by the various and choice bits of German script that adorned the blackboard, Monday morning. But 'twas only the hierogly[illegible] the German I pupils to express their thoughts in the handwriting of "Lieb Vaterland."

Foolish Questions No. 5,934,721. Has Russel McNeil a cold?

SHAKESPEARIAN READINGS

She was reading the lines of Cassius in "Julius Cæsar" when suddenly she stopped short and blushed.

"Proceed!" came the peremptory request from the desk.

"If-" she continued in a weak voice, "If you know that I do fawn on men and hug them hard-"

Miss Mitchell caused the tears to well in the eyes of the English III class, as well as those of Mr. Comfort whom she was addressing, with her rendering of the line, "You love me not!"

The class, as a whole, will probably enter the dramatic field, and judging from the first readings of Shakespear's "Julius Cæsar," they will surely take all dramatic circles by storm.

THE SOPHS HEARD FROM

Some astonishing revelations were made this week by the Sophomore maidens, Wednesday. They appeared minus psyches, French rolls, and Juggernant twists into which their interesting vegetation is usually tortured. A modest, slender, (in some cases, very slender) curl was all that was left of the crowning glory of the other days.

MISS FEATHERWEIGHT'S QUESTION BUREAU

My dear Miss Featherweight:

Can you suggest a good soothing syrup for the Freshmen?

Miss Nixon.

Miss Nixon:

When your Freshmen become particularly obstreperous, collar them and soak their heads for five consecutive minutes in a tub filled with the following solution:

10 oz. Carbolic acid
2 lb. Paris Green
1 Can of Dutch Cleanser
1 Gal. Muriatic acid
1 Gal. Ammonia
5 oz. each of chloroform, opium, morphine.

This may be perfumed, if desired by one gallon of superannuated hydrochloric acid. When their spirits are sufficiently, remove and heat them until light and frothy. We trust this will have the desired effect.

My dear Miss Featherweight:

How may I reduce my weight?

Miss R. U. Badou.

Miss R. U. Badou:

I think that a steady milk diet and the daily execution of the milk wagon roll will do the work very nicely.

CONUNDRUMS

Because they wished to appear brilliant.

Why is "Diana of the Chase" Ralph Hunt's favorite statue?

Because she is the goddess of the Hunt.

Economy Hints

THE fuel value of two pounds of wood is roughly equivalent to that of one pound of coal. This is given as the result of certain calculations now being made in the forest service laboratory, which show also about how many cords of certain kinds of wood are required to obtain an amount of heat equal to that in a ton of coal.

Certain kinds of wood, such as hickory, oak, beech, birch, hard maple, ash, elm, locust, long leaf pine and cherry, have fairly high heat values and only one cord of seasoned wood of these species is required to equal one ton of good coal.

It takes a cord and a half of short leaf pine, hemlock, red gum, Douglass fir, sycamore and soft maple to equal a ton of coal and two cords of cedar, redwood, poplar, catalpa, Norway pine, cypress, basswood, spruce and white pine.

Equal weights of dry, nonresinous woods, however, are said to have practically the same heat value regardless of species, and as a consequence it can be stated as a general proposition that the heavier the wood the more heat to the cord. Weight for weight, however, there is little difference between various species. The average heat for all that have been calculated is 4,600 calories, or heat units, to a kilogram. A kilogram of resin will develop 9,400 heat units or about twice the average for wood. As a consequence, resinous woods have a greater heat value to the pound than nonresinous woods, and this increased value varies, of course, with the resin content.

It is pointed out, however, that heat value is not the only test of usefulness in fuel wood, and since 95 per cent of all wood used for fuel is consumed for domestic purposes, largely in farmhouses, such factors as rapidity of burning and ease of lighting are important. Each section of the country has its favored woods, and these are said to be, in general, the right ones to use. Hickory, of the nonresinous woods, has the highest fuel value to the unit volume of wood and has other advantages. It burns evenly and, as housewives say, holds the heat.

The oaks come next, followed by beech, birch and maple. Pine has a relatively low heat value to a unit volume, but has other advantages. It ignites readily and gives out a quick, hot flame, but one that soon dies down. This makes it a favorite with rural housekeepers as a summer wood, because it is particularly adapted for hot fires in the kitchen.

FENETTA SARGEANT HASKELL

The second number in the course of entertainments given by the C. W. Best Artist's was given last evening at the Presbyterian church. A large and appreciative audience was in attendance.

Mrs. Haskell gave an impersonation of the three act play "Now-a-days" and won her audience from the start by the charming manner in which she handled the various characters of the play.

There was no intermission between acts, Mrs. Haskell simply announcing the beginning of each act. She is a woman of great personality and the play dealt with the problems of the "Now-a-day" woman. At the close of the reading she responded to an encore giving a humorous number for the younger folks.

DR. E. M. CONKLIN

Dr. E. M. Conklin passed away at his home in Manchester Friday afternoon Feb. 12 1915 after a lingering illness from tuberculosis.

He was 60 years old New Years Day. His funeral was held from the home Monday at one o'clock with burial in Clinton,

The house was filled to its capacity with his many friends who thus paid tribute to his sterling worth, both as a man and a physician.

The funeral was under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity of which he was a member. About thirty years ago. Dr. Conklin closed up his practice in Tecumseh where he had been for four or five years, and returned to his old home town in Manchester. While here he was held in high esteem and was at one time Master in the Masonic lodge. Quite a large delegation from this lodge attended his funeral.

Mining Under the Ocean.

Mining for tin under the sea is common enough in Cornwall, where the veins are followed for a considerable distance under the waters of the stern coast, but Cornwall is fairly equalled by Chile, which, instead of producing tin, yields large quantities of coal. On Coronet bay are located some of the best coal mines in Chile, and as the seams extend beneath the bay and give evidence of continuing far out into the ocean, coal mining is thus carried on at a good depth beneath the harbor. So impervious to water is the overhead rock that the underground workings are dry and clean. Modern equipment is used, and electric power is supplied at a low rate.

What might have been a serious accident occurred at the home of Fred Anderson Saturday when his sister Mrs. Tillie Hunt was disposing of some small packages found in an old earthen teapot. Garden seeds, tablets and various other small articles were thrown into the stove. At last a small package which she thought was garden seed was thrown into the stove, when an explosion took place, taking off the door of the stove which struck Mrs. Fred Anderson, and setting fire to Mrs Hunt's clothing. Her right hand and left arm were quite badly burned. Except for the presence of so many of the friends, there might have been great damage done.

'Brotherhood' Banquet

Presbyterian Church,
Friday Evening

160 IN ATTENDANCE

The Men's Brotherhood class of the Presbyterian church gave their annual banquet Friday evening in the parlors of the church. Invitations were extended to about 160 members and guests who met in the auditorium and at 6:30 Miss Ager played a march and the company marched to the dining room where six tables were spread.

The speakers were seated at a table facing the audience. At the opposite end of the hall a large portrait of Abraham Lincoln was displayed with American flags draping the walls. Clusters of flags were in the center of the tables with single flags scattered about. The napkins were furnished by The Uncle Sam's Macaroni Co. Mr. Cuthbert had charge of the serving assisted by a number of the younger men of the church.

Rev. Hartzog gave the invocation and the Masonic Quartette gave two numbers. A three course banquet was served, after which the president of the class, Richard Molles, presented the toastmaster Rev. W. A. Rex.

Mr. Rex spoke of his hesitancy in assuming the position of toastmaster and his inability to do full justice to the speakers who were to follow, but before the evening was over he proved himself equal to the occasion. Rev. Rex said that Choate's definition of a toast was "Say nothing."

The first speaker was Rev. G. W. Jennings whose subject was "Lincoln as a Temperance Man." Mr. Jennings stated that Lincoln was a temperance man long before our Brother Hartzog began.

He was followed by Atty. George A. Rathbun who felt complimented at having been called upon to speak with such a fine array of preachers, but felt pleased to be associated with them once in awhile. Atty. Rathbun told numerous anecdotes and stories of Lincoln.

Rev F. Hewitt was next presented. He read extracts from speeches that Lincoln had made, bearing upon his religious experiences.

The speaker of the evening, Judge James Austin Jr. of Toledo, judge of the city police court, was introduced. He told of his experiences while prosecuting attorney for two years and police judge for the past eight years. During his time of public office he has passed judgment on 50,000 men and women.

The judge was very earnest in his talk and when the time came for him to take his departure on the 9 o'clock train, he said the time had come for him to go and he trusted he had not tired his audience. A voice from the audience cried, "Go on, stay," others repeating it througnout the hall.

And he stayed and talked another hour. He made the statement that he was so used to being the butt of criticism that when he talked to an appreciative audience such as he had before him, it was a pleasure to talk of his work.

The judge covered almost every phase of crime and vice with which he had come in contact, telling of his various ways of meting out judgment to the offender, trying to deal with the motive rather than the crime. He spoke of the old style judge confining himself strictly to the letter of the law as on the statute books If the prisoner was found guilty, sentence was meted out as the law had prescribed, thus making criminals out of first time offenders who might have been reformed, if paroles had been used instead of imprisonment. The medical man has shown the fallacy of sending a man to prison when an offense has been committed while in a fit of temporary insanity when he should be given to a physician for treatment instead

He said he was using with marked success the parole and suspended sentence both before and after imprisonment. The juvenile court, the Boy Scout movement and Y. M. C. A. are great factors in coping with and helping those who have started on the way to vice and crime.

Out of the number paroled and upon whom suspended sentence had been passed by him, 94 out of 100 had made good. He cited one instance where it had cost the City of Toledo $1000 during seven years at the rate of 50c a day to keep one darkey in prison. He was later paroled and made good, showing that, aside from moral effect, it paid the city from a financial standpoint,

He claimed that through the idleness of the prisoner, the families were being punished.

The greatest questions that large communities have to cope with at the present day are prostitution and liquor and the most effective way of correcting these evils and the evil of gambling was not the rounding up of these offenders and hauling them to jail but for those in authority to stop doing these things themselves.

His remarks were listened to with close attention and the two hours passed all too quickly. By special request the quartet gave another number, thus closing the meeting and as the men left the room, each one was given the opportunity of meeting the judge.

TRIBOLET OPENING DAY

The opening day at the Tribolet Co. 5 and 10c store was a big success far exceeding their expectations their being more of a crowd in proportion than they had at their opening in Coldwater.

The store had been thoroughly remodeled and the stock is neatly displayed comparing favorably [illegible] city stores in this line.

The store opened at 9 o'clock Saturday morning and in a very short time their stock of brooms was completly sold out.

Their sale of graniteware scheduled for 2 p. m., because of the congested condition of the store, was held at 1:30 the crowd being so great that the doors were closed and by 1:45 their 475 pieces of granite-ware offered at this sale were all sold with the exception of twelve pieces. To demonstrate that Tecumseh people are fond of kisses it might be interesting to know that 300 sacks of candy kisses were sold, completely closing out the supply. At 3.45 the management told us that they had registered 900 sales.

The Soft Answer.

Walter H. Marshall, manager of the Vanderbilt, had to wait so long for one of his own elevators the other morning that when the door finally opened he was prepared to give the attendant a scolding.

"Where did you come from?" he demanded, meaning, of course, from which floor. He was misunderstood by the new man, who had just been put on the lever.

"From Tipperary, sorr," was the reply.

Involuntarily the manager started to hum, "It's a long way." Then he smiled and forgot to scold.—New York Times.

Spoiled His Dinner.

Edgar Bronson on leaving Quito swore that he would never again go to South America. "They're too easy going about their food down there," Bronson complained. "I'm not hard to suit, but they annoy me. Last time I was in Quito I stopped at a little hotel run by a half breed. I secured a magnificent Chicago steak from the steward of a New York steamer and conveyed it, packed in ice, to the chef. I thought more of that steak than a woman does of her teeth. I anticipated the one great treat of my existence when it was served for dinner that night. I bathed, shaved and dressed in honor of the event and told the waiter to bring on my steak. It was delayed. 'What's the matter?' I roared at him. 'Why don't you hurry with that steak?' 'In a moment, senor,' the waiter soothed me. 'It is coming. There was an accident, senor. The cook's dog, he stole the senor's steak, and it take the cook half of the hour to run the meeserable dog down and tek the bifstek away from him.'"

Natural Mistake.

Henry J. Byron, the playwright, was a wit and a wag. It was Byron who said a play is like a cigar—if a failure no puffing can make it draw, but if it is a success everybody wants a box.

Sterling Coyne was for many years a well known English manager whose center of operations was Birmingham. He was addicted to the snuff habit and, having a heavy mustache and beard, generally presented a soiled and mussy appearance. One day Byron was in Birmingham and saw Coyne. Struck by his repulsive externals, he inquired of a friend who he was. "That is Sterling Coyne," was the reply.

"Oh," chuckled Byron, "I thought it was Filthy Lucre."

One of Nature's Blessings.

"Is dem you all's chickens?"

"Cose dey my all's chickens. Whose chickens did you s'pose dey was?"

"I wasn't s'posin' nuffin' about 'em. But I will say dat it's mighty lucky dat a chicken won' come a-runnin' an' a-waggin' its tail when its regular owner whistles, same as a dog."—Kansas City Times.

POLISHING HINT.

How to Brighten and Care For Your Silver.

Not every housewife realizes that she can save herself an immense amount of time and trouble on the big silver cleaning day if she will take the proper daily care of it.

Remember in the first place to wash the silver as soon as possible after it has been used. A wooden tub should be used for this purpose if you possess such a thing, as then there will be little danger of scratching the silver. Take water as hot as the hand can bear, add a few drops of ammonia and enough melted soap or soap powder to make a nice lather.

Wash the silver in this, using a piece of soft toweling to rub it with. Rinse in clean hot water and dry with a fine towel while the silver is still warm. You will find that if it is allowed to remain wet it will be difficult to remove the water marks. For this reason, if a large quantity of silver is being done, it is best to do a little at a time.

When quite dry give each article a good rub with a chamois leather. This gives a brilliant polish.

Take great care not to scratch the silver throughout the process, and it is a good idea to keep the forks separate from the other articles. Another important point to remember is that both towel and lather must be perfectly clean and free from grease.

Egg spoons that have been very much stained with the sulphur from the egg should be rubbed with a little fine dry salt and then washed.

A silver teapot may be washed in the same way, only if it has a wooden handle it must not be allowed to soak in hot water. When a teapot begins to have a discolored appearance inside or to smell musty fill it to the brim with boiling water and add a piece of washing soda. Close down the lid and let it stay like that all night.

Of course from time to time silver should have a special cleaning. One of the best things to use for this is fine whitening or some good plate powder and liquid ammonia. Put a little whitening, not more than one dessertspoonful at a time, into a saucer and mix into a perfectly smooth paste with ammonia. It should be of the consistency of thin cream. Apply this to the silver with a piece of soft flannel, rubbing each article well, and especially those parts which are most likely to be stained. Allow this to dry on the silver, then rub off with a second piece of flannel, using a soft silver brush wherever necessary to remove the whitening.

HOW TO KEEP YOUR STOCKINGS DIVIDED IN THE BUREAU DRAWER.

The dainty woman does not jumble her silk stockings helter skelter into a bureau drawer, but keeps each pair separate from the others in a long, narrow box divided off into compartments. This makes it easier, also, to select just the right pair of stockings when one is in a hurry, for the day of black silk stockings, with an occasional resort to white silk, is past. The modern woman must have bronze stockings for bronze slippers, natural silk stockings for wear with fawn topped buttoned boots and pastel tinted hosiery to match dancing slippers of satin.

It is easy to make a stocking box to fit bureau or chiffonier drawer. Cut up a long pasteboard box such as coats and suits are delivered in to make the stocking box. Two pieces the length of the drawer and about four inches wide will make the sides of the box. The ends should be 4 by 6 inches. The partitions which divide the long, narrow box into compartments should be the size of the ends and should be placed at intervals of about five or six inches apart, according to the length of the box. Cover all the pieces of pasteboard with cretonne or cover the sides of the box on the outside with cretonne and on the inside with pussy willow silk to match. In this case the partitions also will be covered with silk.

Woman's World

Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout, Noted Illinois Suffrage Leader.

MRS. GRACE WILBUR TROUT.

One of the most effective workers in the suffrage movement is Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout of Chicago, who was among those who led the women of Illinois to victory in their campaign for the vote. She is one of the most popular clubwomen in her state and president of the Illinois Equal Suffrage association. The work of the association has been by no means diminished since the granting of the franchise, for the organization has courageously faced the problem of organizing and educating the women voters of the state. It is now necessary to teach them to realize their civic duties and responsibilities and to show them what can be accomplished by intelligent and conscientious citizens who have the ballot. This work is entirely nonpartisan.

WHY SNOW HEATS THE HANDS

The Brain Calls to the Blood to Help the Chilled Skin.

It is very wonderful that our hands should become warm after playing with snow, for it must be perfectly certain that the cold snow takes heat away very quickly from our warm hands.

The warmth of our hands is derived entirely from the blood, except at times when something hot is actually shining upon them. Therefore, for some reason or other, a very much larger amount of blood than usual must be flowing through our hands. The blood is no warmer in itself, or the whole of the body would at once notice it, but what really happens is that the hands are getting richer and quicker supply of it.

The effect is just the same, really, as the delightful glow that we feel after a cold bath. The brain has the duty of taking care of the skin, as of every other part of the body. Now, when the skin has been chilled its life has been heavily taxed, and it will suffer unless it is compensated. So the brain orders the small blood vessels in the skin, wherever it has been chilled, to relax and widen so that the warm blood is able to circulate quickly through them.—"The Child's Book of Knowledge."

CHARGES CASHIER IS SHORT

Missouri Bank Sues Surety Company on Employe's Bond.

St. Louis, Mo., Feb. 8.—A shortage of $135,000 in the accounts of L. S. Joseph, former cashier of the First National bank of Cape Girardeau, Mo., is charged in suit filed by the bank in the federal district court here. The suit is directed against the surety company that was on Joseph's bond.

Joseph resigned recently as cashier of the bank and the bank now is suing the surety company for $53,000. The attorney for the bank said the directors made enough deposits in the bank to prevent a crash. Joseph had charge of the bank's loans.

Powers, veteran minor league magnate and six day bicycle race promoter, declares officially that he has purchased the Kansas City franchise of the Federal league which will be moved east in time to operate at the beginning of the season either in the environs of New York or of Jersey City.

Further than the bare admission of fact Mr. Powers did not appear inclined to elucidate.

Fijians at Play.

The Fijian game of tiga is probably as ancient as golf, which it somewhat resembles. The brown warriors play along the roadway, and the game consists of long drives with a reed, one end of which is set in a large brown bean. Balancing a javelin nicely in the hand, with the forefinger as the driving power, they project it swiftly at a mound on the road ahead, from which it glances, falling 200 or 300 yards away. Thus they walk and play for miles, vying with each other for the longest drive. The Fijians "keep their eye on the mound," for it needs some skill to strike the heap of stones at the right spot on the reed so as to secure a long straight flight.

Tragic Tale of a Tragedian.

"The awfulest and the funniest stage wait I ever lived through," said a sprightly English actress, "was when a certain well known London actor-manager, whose name I dare not divulge, was doing a tremendous curse scene on a darkened stage. He had the audience spellbound with his sonorous declamation, which, of course, they didn't know depended largely upon his ample mouthful of false teeth. At the very climax of his blood curdling maledictions the entire dental collection dropped out suddenly in the excitement of the moment and bounded into some obscure hiding place. The tragedian's mighty voice died down to an unintelligible mumble as he groped about frantically in search of the missing masticators. We were all too helpless from laughter to be of much help in this critical situation. At last, after what seemed like half an hour of the most hysterical suspense, the stage manager located the teeth with the aid of a dark lantern and restored them to the frantic star, who clapped them into his mouth and began cursing again with redoubled earnestness. I never knew what the audience thought, and no one ever dared to ask the actor-manager."

Not Stumped.

Once, when the renowned Mrs. Siddons was playing in the Theater Royal, Dublin, she, as Lady Macbeth, came to that part where a drum should sound and she exclaims: 'A drum! A drum! Macbeth doth come!'

There was some difficulty or neglect in obtaining the necessary instrument, and to her amazement a trumpet sounded.

She immediately saw how absurd it would be to say "drum" while the well known sound of the trumpet met the ears of the vast audience. So she said: "A trumpet! A trumpet!" then stopped short, not knowing how to rime it, when a voice from the gallery called out, "Macbeth doth stump it!" at which the house broke out into one peal of laughter and applause, and the tragedienne advanced to the footlights and bowed her acknowledgment for the relief.

THIS WOMAN WAS VERY UNHAPPY

Physically and Mentally Worn Out—Tells How Nervous and Crying Spells Were Ended by Vinol.

Monmouth, Ill.:—"I was weak, worn-out and nervous. I had no appetite and was getting so thin and discouraged, one day I just broke down and cried when a friend came in and asked me what was the matter. I told of my condition and how nothing I took seemed to do me any good. Vinol was suggested. I got a bottle and before it was half gone I could eat and sleep well. I continued its use and now my friends say I look ten years younger, and I am well, healthy and strong. I wish I could induce every tired-out, worn-out, nervous woman to take Vinol."—Mrs. HARRIET GALE, Monmouth, Ill.

There are many over-worked, tired-out careworn, nervous women in this vicinity who need the strengthening, tissue building, and vitalizing effects of Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, and so sure are we that it will build them up and make them strong that we offer to return their money if it fails to benefit.

Vinol is a delicious preparation of the extract of cod liver oil and peptonate of iron and contains no oil.

The Baby Did It

A Story of President Lincoln

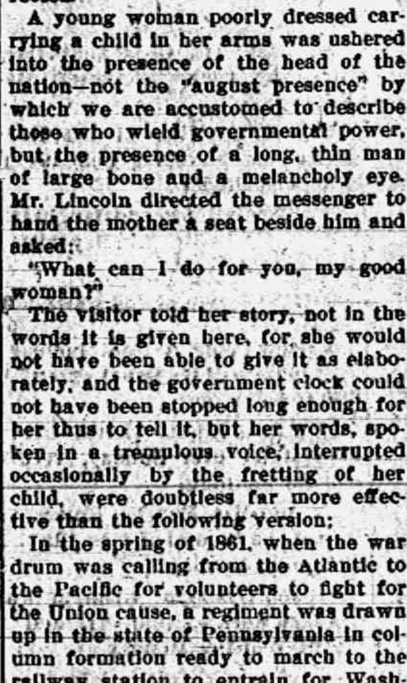
By F. A. MITCHEL

[illegible] what's that?"

President Lincoln was sitting in his room at the White House dispatching the enormous business involved in the great struggle that he was directing, while his anteroom was crowded with those waiting their turn for—all they could expect—a few words with him. The door between him and these persons stood ajar, through which came the cry of a baby. The president ceased from his labors and listened. The cry was repeated. The work of administering a government with 1,000,000 soldiers in the field, struggling for its existence, was brought to a standstill by the cry of an infant.

Mr. Lincoln called an attendant, charged with the introduction of visitors, and asked him what it meant.

"A woman is waiting without who has been here two or three different days. She comes from a long distance and has to bring her child because she knows no one in Washington and has no place where she can leave it."



"YOU SHALL HAVE YOUR HUSBAND," HE SAID.

"Bring her in," the president directed.

A young woman poorly dressed carrying a child in her arms was ushered into the presence of the head of the nation—not the "august presence" by which we are accustomed to describe those who wield governmental power, but the presence of a long, thin man of large bone and a melancholy eye. Mr. Lincoln directed the messenger to hand the mother a seat beside him and asked:

"What can I do for you, my good woman?"

The visitor told her story, not in the words it is given here, for she would not have been able to give it as elaborately, and the government clock could not have been stopped long enough for her thus to tell it, but her words, spoken in a tremulous voice, interrupted occasionally by the fretting of her child, were doubtless far more effective than the following version:

In the spring of 1861, when the war drum was calling from the Atlantic to the Pacific for volunteers to fight for the Union cause, a regiment was drawn up in the state of Pennsylvania in column formation ready to march to the railway station to entrain for Washington. Just before the order "Forward!" was given a girl of twenty, carrying a small bundle, came running up to one of the companies looking eagerly for some one. Private Jack Williams waved his hand to her, and, approaching him, she handed him the bundle containing the last bit of food she could hope to prepare for him in many a month to come. There was but time for an embrace when the word "March!" rang out, the band struck up an inspiriting air, and the regiment moved away.

"Is that your sweetheart?" asked Williams' file closer of him as they marched to the tune of "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

"Sweetheart and wife," was the laconic reply.

Jack Williams, though he had been married but a few months, heard the call of President Lincoln for the 75,000 volunteers that constituted the first detachment of the great army for the Union and enlisted at the nearest recruiting station. One night in Virginia he was on picket duty, standing peering into the darkness for an enemy. Suddenly he felt his arms grasped from behind and a hand clapped over his mouth. His musket fell over in the long grass without sound. He was pushed forward until the picket line of which he had formed a part was left behind. Then a gruff voice said:

"Move on, Yank, if you don't want any lead in your noddle."

A very neat job of picket capture had been achieved by a single Confederate soldier.

The next morning, when the pickets were relieved, the officer of the retiring picket post where the capture had been made asked:

"Where's Williams?"

There was no reply to the question.

"Where's Williams?" the officer repeated, and, still receiving no answer, asked where he had been posted.

"Third man to the east of the pike," replied the sergeant, "between Rice and Kimball."

"Did either of you men hear anything of Williams during the night?" asked the officer of the men mentioned.

Both men replied that they had not.

"How far apart were the men posted?" asked the officer of the sergeant.

"On the west side of the pike I put them a hundred feet apart; on the east side I fell short of men and made it about two hundred. The ground was bad for a picket line; scrubby trees and bushes scattered irregularly."

"Gone over to the enemy," said the officer.

The name of Private John Williams was entered on the regimental rolls of his regiment as a deserter.

Meanwhile Williams was huddled in with other prisoners of war in the rear of the Confederate lines, awaiting transportation to Libby prison at Richmond. He spent some months there, when, the prison becoming crowded, a detachment of prisoners was sent to a stockade prison situated in South Carolina. Williams, with others in the same car with him—a freight car—laid a plan to escape. One of them had concealed a caseknife on his person and during the long hours of prison life had occupied his mind inventing ways to make a saw of it by nicking the edge. He had made poor headway until a fellow prisoner lent him a file. After that the matter was easy.

Williams and his friends in the freight car by means of the improvised tool managed to saw through a board in the floor of the car. When the train stopped during the night they removed the board and let themselves down through the aperture. Of three men who made the attempt two succeeded in getting away; the third was shot by the guard. Williams was one of the men who got away, but he and the other ran in different directions and did not come together again.

An account of the wanderings of Private Williams would be much the same as other escaped prisoners of war from '61 to '65. He traveled at night and was hidden by the negroes during the day. His compass was the north star. He suffered terribly from exposure and lived on berries, green corn and such other vegetable food as he could find except when some kind negro gave him a little corn pone.

Williams in order to escape detection took often to swamp lands. There he contracted fever, and when finally he dragged himself into the Union lines he was placed in a hospital.

It was about this time that the United States government was beginning to pay bounties to those who would enlist. This afforded an [illegible] for criminals to secure the bounty and desert. Enough of this was done to attract the attention of the generals, and they sought to put a stop to it by trying the bounty jumpers for desertion and shooting them in presence of their comrades.

It was reported to the colonel of John Williams' regiment that a soldier was in hospital who had given that name on being received there. He became delirious, but was now better. The colonel directed the surgeon in charge of the hospital to send Williams to him under guard as soon as he was discharged.

What has been told here having been briefly stated to the president, the woman handed him a soiled letter to read. It had been dictated by her husband, who was lying ill at the time, to one of those self sacrificing women—both of the north and the south—who gave so much comfort to the sick and wounded of the war. It recounted his capture, his escape, his wandering and privations, ending with a pitiful request for her to come to him.

"I was helped to go to him by friends," she added, "and when I found him he told me that as soon as he was well enough he would be shot for desertion."

The poor woman had been told what was true. Her husband could at that time get no proof of the story he had to tell. His witnesses were all cut off from him by a bristling line of bayonets. And even if he could have been free to go to them he would not have been able to find the only witness who could clear him, the man who had captured him. His wife had appealed to his colonel for mercy, but he had set his teeth, resolved to stop desertion if he had to shoot every man in the army.

Such was the situation that was brought before Mr. Lincoln by the cry of a babe. And it would have been even more pathetic had the kind hearted president known when he heard it that the cry was an unconscious pleading for its father's life. Mr. Lincoln had no proof that the woman's story was true; he required no proof. He saw a woman pleading for her husband's life with his child in her arms, and he had no desire, no time, to investigate.

"You shall have your husband," he said, "and he shall have his pay, with leave of absence and transportation to his home."

The end of the scene was told in these words by the messenger who had introduced the woman to the president and was present during this interview of life and death:

"As he turned to his desk to write the order the poor woman absolutely lost consciousness of her surroundings in her joy and gratitude. She stood by the president's side, holding the baby on one arm, while with her disengaged one she gently stroked the president's ruffled hair, saying, 'God bless you; God bless you.'"

Unwelcome Eaters Go to Jail.

New York, Feb. 8.—Eleven men without money, who, after eating $4.95 worth of food in Thompson's restaurant in the Grand Central terminal building, refused to pay their bill, are in the work house to serve ten days each, which sentence was imposed by Magistrate Marsh. One of the prisoners, Joseph Bernhard, declared that "we believe the city owes us a living. We are entitled to food and saw no other way of getting it."

Time and a Talk.

Mark Sullivan, the editor of Collier's Weekly, was the speaker of the evening at a recent banquet given in Detroit by the Adcraft club. He was the last on the program. It was noticed that Mr. Sullivan spoke very rapidly, though eloquently. His remarks were brief, and afterward it was wondered by those who heard him why he didn't speak longer.

"I omitted many things that I intended to say," said Mr. Sullivan to a friend afterward.

"Why?" the friend asked.

"It was so late," answered Mr. Sullivan.

"It wasn't very late," the friend replied, "and the audience was very anxious to hear you."

"I looked at my watch when I got up," said Sullivan, "and it was a quarter to 12. At that hour no one should attempt to make a speech."

"Heavens, man!" exclaimed the friend, "you've got eastern standard time. It was only a quarter of 11 when you started."—Detroit Free Press.

FANNY CROSBY

Blind Hymn Writer Who Dies In Her Ninety-fifth Year.

BRIDGEPORT, CONN.—Fanny Crosby, the blind hymn writer whose "Rescue the Perishing," "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," and many other hymns have had an extremely wide appeal for more than a half a century, died at her home in this city. She would have been ninety-five years of age on March 24.

STOLEN CHILD FOILS MAN ABDUCTING HER

Willard Gagnier Is Taken at Instance of Victim.

DETROIT, MICH. — The arrest of Willard Gagnier, alleged kidnaper of ten year old Elsie Streicher of Wyandotte, was brought about by the girl herself, when the child told the story of her abduction and subsequent detention in Toronto. Elsie gave the credit of her escape to Mrs. Joseph McMullen of Toronto, to whose home Gagnier took her when they arrived in Toronto.

Despite alleged threats made by Gagnier, Elsie refused to keep silent. Secretly she told Mrs. McMullen that he was not her father as he represented, and that he had kidnaped her. Before this, however, she had unsuccessfully endeavored to write to her parents, or telling a policeman, Gagnier having frustrated her attempts, she declared.

She gave Mrs. McMullen her address, asking her to notify her parents, and it was on receipt of Mrs. McMullen's letter that Mrs. Streicher notified the authorities that her daughter was in Toronto. A deputy sheriff sent there apprehended Gagnier, with the help of the Toronto police.

"We did not know that Gagnier was a former convict," said Miss Florence Streicher, sister of the little girl. "He told us he had served in the army, whereas we now learn that he had served in a penitentiary. We knew his parents several years ago, and they were very fine people, but we knew little about Gagnier."

ONE TIME CLUBMAN IS JAILED FOR LARCENY

G. F. Kenny Held on Charge of Stealing $1,000.

JACKSON, MICH. — George F. Kenny, one time prominent club man of Detroit, is held in the county jail here under an indictment from the courts in Boston, Mass., charging larceny of $1,000 from Desmond S. Lamb of that city, Sept. 25, 1914.

Kenny was arrested at Springport, where he was living with his brother-in-law, W. T. Hahn. Kenny is suffering from a cancer, which has eaten away part of his face, and he says he can live only a few weeks longer.

Ten years ago, Kenny was well known in club circles in Detroit. He was engaged in business in that city and is said while there to have made $150,000 on copper stocks in one deal. Later, it is asserted by the officers, he was involved in a stock promotion deal which ended disastrously and he went to China. Upon his return to America he was arrested in Rhode Island and sent to prison.

Saturday Kenny gave Hahn a check for $400 on a Springport bank. When the Springport bank made inquiries in Boston relative to Kenny's financial standing, the Boston officers learned his whereabouts and requested his arrest.

REMEMBERS RAZOR TOO LATE

Brown City Woman Cuts Her Throat With Blade.

BROWN CITY, MICH. — While her husband and daughter were at church Mrs. Ephriam Thomas, who recently returned home from the state asylum at Pontiac, committed suicide by cutting her throat with a razor. Mrs. Thomas' mind had been unbalanced for some time, but recently authorities at the Pontiac asylum concluded she had recovered and she was discharged. In the morning she appeared to be perfectly normal.

By a curious coincidence Mr. Thomas, during the service, remembered that he had not put his razor away after shaving and left before the service was over. When he entered the house he found the dead body of his wife on the kitchen floor.

Hurt by Cave-in.

Berlin Warns English Submarines May Sink Neutral Ships.

GERMANY WOULD BE BLAMED

600,000 More British Recruits Arrive in France—Albanian Raiders Driven Back Over Serbian Frontier—Germany Asked to Spare Roumania—Bomb Kills Bulgar Aristocrats.

BERLIN — The Tageblatt discusses the question whether British submarines are in the Baltic. Well-informed sources, it says, furnish communications that leave little doubt that the recent attack on the German cruiser Gazelle was undertaken by large modern submarines manned by English crews.

British Place Mines For "Divers".

BERLIN — The official statement reading as follows was issued in Berlin: "Inasmuch as it is to the interest of Great Britain that conflicts arise between Germany and neutral powers, it is thought in German shipping circles that English submarines, in order to bring about this end, may purposely sink one or more neutral ships. It is known also in the shipping circles that Great Britain has laid large quantities of mines against German submarines."

600,000 More British in France.

NEW YORK — Paris mail advices received here are that the first troops of the new Kitchner armies are now arriving in France in numbers estimated at 600,000 men.

"The Canadian forces that have been drilling at Salisbury Plain are now in France," says the correspondent.

Albian Raiders Repulsed.

PARIS — A Nish dispatch to the Havas agency says:

"The Albian raiders have been routed and driven back across the Serbian frontier. More comprehensive information shows that the Albians were led into making the raid by Austrian priests and Mohammedan adversaries of Essad Pasha, the provisional president, by preaching a holy war. The movement is being directed by Turkish and German agents."

Asked to Spare Roumania.

ADRIAN, MICH. — Richard Alkema, an operator of a crane shovel used in the Lake Shore yards here to coal engines, had a miraculous escape from death this morning, when the machine, weighing more than fifteen tons, tipped over while he was in the operator's cab. The machine was picking cinders from a pit and the crane was allowed to run out so that it overbalanced the "boom."

Alkema was imprisoned in the cab, where his legs and hips were badly bruised. His head was also injured. It was necessary to call a wrecking train from Toledo to clear the tracks.

It was announced that the Dutch minister at Berlin had been instructed to hand the note to he German office, the other note being communicated to Great Britain at the same time. There has been much discussion of the dangers to be encountered in the North Sea, and Dutch shipping is menaced more than that of any one neutral nation.

Winston Churchill Says Undersea Raiders Will Be Guarded Against—Lloyd George Reports War Will Cost Allies $10,000,000,000 in Year—Allies to Back Each Other.

LONDON — William Spencer Churchill, first lord of the admiralty, stated in the house of commons that Great Britain has prepared a plan to prevent the importation of food stuffs in neutral ships to Germany. He also announced that effective means would be taken to meet Germany's new naval policy as regards British mercantile shipping, saying:

"England's reply to the German threat will not be ineffective. We shall see to it that Germany is not permitted to adopt a system of open piracy and murder."

Mr. Churchill declared that Great Britain entered the war as well prepared for anything that might happen as Germany. Since the outbreak of the war England has lost sixty-three ships exclusive of mine trawlers, according to the figures he gave. Speaking of the country's general naval policy he said that the new dreadnaughts are being equipped with 15 inch guns which are equally as powerful as the present maximum of 13.5 inch and are much more destructive. He added:

"The British navy itself could, under certain circumstances decide the issue of this war. We are not going to stand idly by and see Germany carry into effect her threat to play the pirate's part and raid English shipping. It is probable that a new plan of action will bring the full pressure of British naval power to bear upon Germany."

Mr. Churchill hinted that England might decree a formal blockade of all German seaports. He said that Britain's naval losses during the war have been 5,500 officers and men and that Germany's had been about the same.

Allies to Spend $10,000,000,000.

Another important development of the session of the commons was the announcement by David Lloyd George, the chancellor, of the arrangements made at the recent conference of the finance ministers of France, Russia and Great Britain in Paris. He said that the expenditures of the allies on the war during the present year would be two billion pounds ($10,000,000,000) sterling, of which Great Britain would spend more than Russia or France.

The war, Mr. Lloyd George said, is the most expensive in men, material and money that the world has ever known. He asserted that Great Britain could finance the war for five years out of the proceeds of her investments abroad and that France could do the same for at least two or three years. Russia is in a different position because, although rich in natural resources, her financial arrangements are not so productive as those of her allies.

A HARD TEST

There are few cases of fistula. Yet Michigan horse-owners know that a liniment that can cure that is certainly good for the ordinary external ills of horses. This is what Roy H. Jelly Roll Recipe

Only Two Eggs Required

By Mrs. Janet McKenzie Hill, Editor of the Boston Cooking School Magazine

This Jelly Roll is fast becoming very popular on account of the way it keeps fresh. With proper handling it should keep fresh a whole week, providing it isn't eaten up in the meantime, for it is every bit as good as it looks. 33

K C Jelly Roll

One cup sifted flour; scant half teaspoonful salt; 2 level teaspoonfuls K C Baking Powder; grated rind of 1 lemon; 2 eggs beaten light; 1 cup sugar; 6¼ cup hot milk; glass of jelly; powdered sugar.

Beat the sugar into the eggs; add the lemon rind, then the flour, sifted three times with the salt and baking powder; and, lastly, the milk. Bake in a buttered dripping pan; turn out on a damp cloth, trim off the crisp edges; spread with jelly and turn over and over into a roll while still warm. Dredge the top with powdered sugar.

Hot milk used in the jelly roll enables it to be rolled without danger of cracking. Have the milk scalding hot, also be careful to have the eggs and sugar beaten together until very light and creamy. Bake in a moderate oven.

K C Jelly Roll is illustrated on page thirty-two of the new and handsomely illustrated 64-page K C Cook's Book, which may be secured free by sending the certificate packed in every 25-cent can of K C Baking Powder to the JAQUES MFG. Co., Chicago, Ill.

60TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE LILLEY STATE BANK

To Be Observed Saturday, Feb. 20.

The Lilley State Bank has issued invitations for a reception in honor of the sixtieth anniversary of the founding of the bank to be held Saturday afternoon from 1 to 4 o'clock and in the evening from 7 to 8:30 o'clock. The board of directors and the management of the bank have issued about 2500 invitations to friends and patrons and to bankers throughout the state. They are planning to make Saturday one of the biggest days in the history of the bank.

In 1855, sixty years ago, Lucius Lilley came to Tecumseh from Adrian and associated himself with the bank which now bears his name. Up to 1865 the bank was known as the Bank of Tecumseh. From this date until [illegible] 1873 it was a national bank, known as the National Bank of Tecumseh. In 1873 it became a private bank under the name of Bills, Lilley & Co. In 1880 Mr. Bills passed away and the name was again changed to Lilley, Bidwell & Co. continuing under this name until 1893 when the bank was organized under the state laws as the Lilley State Bank, its present name.

Four years ago they remodelled and gave to the public one of the finest banking office in this part of the state. Prior to this the bank did a commercial business only, but at this time a savings department was added to the business. Four years ago the total assets were $265,000, today they are $430,000. The Lilley State Bank has a paid up capital of $40,000 with surplus and undivided profits of $22,000.

The present officers of the bank are

President—P. W. A. Fitzsimmons
Vice Pres.—R. A. Heesen
Cashier—F. J. Temple
Asst. Cashier—H. S. Temple

We congratulate the bank on its long years of success and bespeak for it a prosperous future.

PLAN TO COME

WIT AND WISDOM

The adjourned meeting of the Wit and Wisdom Club met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Slayton Thursday evening with a good attendance. After a short business session C. A. Slayton as leader announced the following program:

Trombone solo—Wilfred Waldron accompanied by Miss Lulu Brown

Humorous reading, "Sewing on the Buttons"—Mrs. Chas. Kemp

A. O. Howard then read an original prophecy for the year 2000 as published in the Tecumseh Herald Jan. 28, 1910.

At this point the men of the club sang "When Mother Comes Marching Home Again."

This was followed by an original poem on the Suffrage Question by F. J. Temple which was presented in a very convincing manner.

Roll Call: "What rights shall we give to men or women that they have not already" brought out many rights for each that they knew not of, the men and women vieing with each other in their generous gifts.

Refreshments and a guessing contest closed a very interesting program.

This being gentlemen's night, they came in evening dress with their white gloves and vests. The meeting was a very delightful one.

Mrs. Ashabel Cheal and child of Battle Creek are visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs George Church.

The Scrap Book

Couldn't Stand the Hoodoo.

He was a college boy, home for vacation, and his mother's cook had prevailed upon him to lend her $5 for two weeks. Much to the surprise of the family, cook departed from her practice of keeping such funds indefinitely and paid the debt promptly. When questioned about it she said:

"No, dat boy never once ask me fer dat money. He never dun me at all, but when I serves his late breakfast in de mornin' he always leave five biscuits on de plate when he used to eat 'em all, an' he tells me he likes five lumps of sugar in his coffee when everybody knows dat's too sweet. Den when I goes in my kitchen I finds five raw potatoes on my table an' five lumps of coal laid by my stove. Dem fives jes' natchully ha'nts me, so I pays him."—New York Post.

OWE MY HEALTH to Peruna

I was Gradually Breaking Down From Confinement to Store.

Mr. C. N. Petersen, dealer in fine boots, shoes and cigars, No. 132 South Main St., Council Bluffs, Iowa, writes:

"I cannot tell you how much good Peruna has done me. Constant confinement in my store began to tell on my health and I felt that I was gradually breaking down.

"I tried several remedies prescribed by my physician, but obtained no permanent relief until I took Peruna. I felt better immediately, and five bottles restored me to complete health. I have been in the best of spirits since, and feel that I owe my health to it."

Catch Cold Easily.

Mr. Arthur G. Peterson, R. F. D. 21, Box 21, Omro, Wisconsin. He was in the habit of catching cold easily.

He says: "It has been seven months now since I have taken any Peruna and I haven't felt the least touch of cold since, and I am positive that I am now rid of the tendency to catch cold. Peruna is a wonderful remedy."

Those who object to liquid medicines can now procure Peruna Tablets.

KITCHEN KINKS.

How to Save Gas or Coal by Using a Fireless Cooker.

Chicken Fricassee.—Cut up chicken and roll each piece in flour; brown pieces in fat; as each piece is browned pack in cooking pail. Make some gravy in pan in which browning is done. Pour gravy into the cooking pail and add enough water to cover chicken. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Boil twenty minutes on stove; then put in cooker for overnight. Reheat it when you want to use it. (By using the fireless cooker you save about two hours of coal or gas.)

Dried Fruits, Such as Peaches, Apricots and Prunes.—These require long, slow cooking and little sugar. Dried prunes do not require any sugar at all, as the long, slow cooking develops the natural sweetness in the fruit.

Wash all dried fruit carefully. Put in cooking pail and cover with cold water, using one pint of fruit to one and one-half pints of water. Bring to the simmering point on the stove and simmer for about fifteen minutes; then place in fireless cooker and leave for six or eight hours or overnight.

(You save at least three hours of coal or gas by using the fireless cooker for these.)

Cereals. — Put in cooking pail and cook on the stove for about fifteen minutes, and then put in fireless cooker and leave for twelve to fifteen hours or overnight. Cereals require long, slow cooking, and by using a fireless cooker you save a great many hours of coal or gas.

Apples in Sirup. Pare and core sour apples and then cut in half. Make a sirup of one cupful of sugar and one cupful of water. Cook over fire in cooking pail until clear. Add apples and boil five minutes. Then put in fireless cooker for four or five hours.

Beef Stew.—For making stews use ends of ribs, neck, knuckle or hind shin. Cut beef into small pieces; add one onion cut in small pieces. Put meat in cooking pail with an inverted saucer or something else under it to keep it from sticking. Add enough cold water to cover meat. Bring to simmering point. Let it simmer twenty minutes. Then add halved or quartered potatoes, a few pieces of carrot and turnip, salt and pepper to taste. Let it come to a boil and then place the pail in the fireless cooker and leave for seven or eight hours. Before potatoes are added to the stew boil them for five minutes on the stove.

(It would take about three hours to cook this on your stove. By using the fireless cooker you save two and one-half hours of coal or gas.)

Lamb Stew. — One and one-half pounds breast of lamb, one pint boiling water, four medium sized potatoes, quartered and parboiled, one sliced onion, two tablespoonfuls rice, one cupful strained tomatoes, salt and pepper.

Brown the onions in a little fat in the cooking pail; then add the meat, cut roughly into cube shaped pieces; sprinkle with salt and pepper. Cover with boiling water. Let it simmer on the stove for twenty minutes. Then add potatoes, rice and tomatoes. Let it come to a boil and then place in fireless cooker for four or five hours. By using fireless cooker you save one and one-half hours of coal or gas.

How to Make the Most of Your Mirrors.

Use mirrors economically; make every one count.

Place one, after the French fashion, over the fireplace to reflect the room, or place one in English fashion between the windows at the end of a long narrow room to emphasize the light there.

Place one where it will reflect a charming glimpse of the garden through a window opposite it.

Place one in the hall opposite the entrance into the drawing room or living room to give a sense of spaciousness.

Place one in a bedroom where it will reflect the mirror of the dressing table.

Remember that flowers in front of a mirror are twice as attractive as flowers placed against a wall.

THIS WOMAN WAS VERY UNHAPPY
Physically and Mentally Worn Out—Tells How Nervous and Crying Spells Were Ended by Vinol.

Monmouth, Ill.:—"I was weak, worn-out and nervous. I had no appetite and was getting so thin and discouraged, one day I just broke down and cried when a friend came in and asked me what was the matter. I told of my condition and how nothing I took seemed to do me any good. Vinol was suggested. I got a bottle and before it was half gone I could eat and sleep well. I continued its use and now my friends say I look ten years younger, and I am well, healthy and strong. I wish I could induce every tired-out, worn-out, nervous woman to take Vinol."—Mrs. HARRIET GALE, Monmouth, Ill.

There are many over-worked, tired-out careworn, nervous women in this vicinity who need the strengthening, tissue building, and vitalizing effects of Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, and so sure are we that it will build them up and make them strong that we offer to return their money if it fails to benefit.

Vinol is a delicious preparation of the extract of cod liver oil and peptonate of iron and contains no oil.

ITURBE SEIZES TOWN, GUAYAMAS ROAD OPEN

Villa Troops Said to Be Violating Neutrality Pact.

El Paso, Tex., Feb. 22.—Outflanking an army of Governor Maytorena of Sonora, General Ramon Iturbe, Carranza's military governor of Sinaloa, which is at the end of a branch railroad line of the Southern Pacific of Mexico leading from Navojoa, and swung around on the left flank of Maytorena's army in the course of a movement on Guaymas. This is stated in advices received by the Carranza agency here from Nogales, Ariz. The report stated that severe fighting was in progress, but that Iturbe had succeeded in breaking past the enemy and was certain to reach Guayamas.

Advices from Naco, Ariz., stated that more than 1,000 Villa troops of the command of General Juan Cabral have followed the initial command, which occupied Naco, Sonora. The Carranza authorities here have wired to Washington repeated representations that the occupation on the Sonora Port by Villa forces constitutes a violation of the neutrality pledge which Brigadier General Scott, chief of staff of the United States army, induced Governor Maytorena and General Hill to sign.

SLAVER CONFESSES GUILT

Falls In Love With Girl and Lets Plans Drop.

Evansville, Ind., Feb. 22.—A young man who says he is Harold J. Armstrong, who escaped from Indianapolis after he had confessed to Maj. F. J. Preston of the Volunteers of America that he had married Miss Jennie Thompson, eighteen years old, of Portland, Ind., and taken her to Indianapolis to sell into a life of shame, is held by the police here.

According to Armstrong's story to Chief Schmitt he fell in love with the girl, and, conscience stricken, attempted to tell his story to a member of the Volunteers of America in Indianapolis. Armstrong has given local police names of men he says are at the head of a "white slave trust." Local police believe his story.

HARD CASE TO BE DROPPED

Father Who Took Daughter Out of State Not to Be Sought.

Saginaw, Mich., Feb. 22.—No further legal attempt will be made to obtain the custody of seven year old Elizabeth Hard, who, it is said, was taken Thursday morning, while on her way to school, by her father, Herbert A. Hard, and hustled out of the county in a taxicab and later taken out of the state.

According to the prosecuting attorney, no court action is possible other than a warrant for non-support, and a warrant of this nature is not serious enough to justify extradition. Attorneys for Mrs. Hard and the prosecutor conferred and decided not to continue the case. Mr. and Mrs. Hard, it is reported, were never divorced. They signed an agreement disposing of property rights and giving the custody of the children to Mrs. Hard when they separated.

GERMAN PLANES IN BRITISH RAID

Colchester and Other Towns Attacked with Little Loss.

AIR RAIDERS STILL ON WING

Headed In Direction of Harwich, Which Germans Attacked November 13—Colchester Is Historic Place—Once City of Romans—Many Points of Interest.

London, Feb. 22.—Another aerial attack on the east coast was delivered by the Germans, this time with aeroplanes instead of Zeppelins. So far as can be learned the effect of the raid was inconsequential.

The first town attacked was Colchester, in Essex county, on the Colne river, twelve miles from the sea. Only one bomb was dropped there and the aeroplane squadron, the number of machines engaged being unknown, disappeared to the westward. Later reports say that Braintree and Coggeshall had been hit by bombs, but that nobody was hurt and the damage was slight. At that time the hostile air craft seemed to be flying in the direction of Harwich, upon which the Germans made an aerial attack on Nov. 13, according to an announcement by the Berlin war office at that time.

Colchester Military Center.

Colchester, a market town and municipal and parliamentary borough of Essex, England, is fifty-two miles northeast of London on the River Colne, twelve miles from the open sea. It has long been an important military center with a large permanent camp. The population is slightly in excess of 40,000.

There are many ancient buildings in Colchester, which was once the site of the Roman town Colonia Victricensis Camalodunum, which was of great importance, being populated by discharged Roman soldiers.

The modern town contains several specimens of Norman architecture, the most famous of which is the Keep of the Castle, the largest of its kind in England, being twice the size of the White Tower in London. It was erected in the reign of William I or William II. In this, as in other ancient buildings, there are evidences of the use of material from the old Roman town.

The principal modern buildings are the town hall, corn exchange, free library, the eastern counties asylum, Essex county hospital and the barracks. There are also a free grammar school, a technical and university extension college and a literary institute. The town has been famous for centuries for its oysters and fisheries at the mouth of the Colne. It is also the center of an agricultural district.

The most notable event in the history of the town was its siege by Fairfax in 1648, when the raw soldiers of the royalists held out against his army for nearly eleven weeks.

Claim Many Germans Killed.

Paris, Feb. 22.—The war office gave out this statement:

"In Belgium there were some infantry actions. In the sector of Ypres we took a portion of some trenches which the enemy had occupied temporarily. It is confirmed that the Germans left several hundred men on the field. Our losses were slight. In Champaign our gains were maintained. Two counter attacks by the enemy towards night failed. In the Vosges we repulsed three attacks, one on the northern bank of La Fecht and two on the southern bank. The fighting continues."

Germans Claim Two Villages Taken.

Berlin, Feb. 22.—The following statement was given out at army headquarters:

"On the high road between Chauveld and Ypres, on the canal southeast of Ypres, we took one of the enemy's trenches and a few prisoners. In the Vosges our attack made further progress. In the region southeast of Sulzern we captured Hochrodberg, the heights near Hochrod, and the hamlets of Bretzel and Widenthal. Eastern theater: No actual changes have occurred in the district northwest of Grodno. North of Ossowetz, southeast of Kolno, and on the front between Prassny and the Vistula east of Plock, the battles are taking their course. There is nothing new from Poland south of the Vistula."

WOMAN DOCTOR HELD FOR DEATH OF GIRL

Grayling Is Stirred Over Alleged Criminal Operation.

Bay City, Mich., Feb. 22.—Dr. Raye Snyder Everett, well known woman physician of this city, was arrested on a charge of malpractice in connection with the death of Mrs. Evart Buchanan, who died of peritonitis in Mercy hospital at Grayling on Feb. 6.

Prosecuting Attorney James L. McCormick issued the warrant on the application of the dead woman's father, Frank Woodruff of Grayling. It is alleged that a criminal operation was performed on Mrs. Buchanan while she was in this city on a visit.

The father charges that the operation was suggested to his daughter, but that she would not consent to it and alleges that it was performed under the guise of adjusting a minor disorder and that the fatal illness was the result.

Mrs. Buchanan was nineteen years old. After her death a coroner's inquest was held and the jury found that she came to her death through malpractice.

The case has aroused Grayling, where the Woodruff family is prominent.

Petoskey, Mich., Feb. 22.—Peter Nelson, Allen Jonson, Will Wachter and John Le Blanc, three Beaver island men, who were supposed to have been drowned when they were sent adrift on an ice field, are safely home, although badly frozen and suffering from want of food. The men drifted for a considerable time before an east wind. When it shifted they were driven against the main ice field and escaped, after swimming for a short distance to shore.

POPE URGES ITALIANS TO FIGHT FOR COUNTRY

Catholics Not to Remain Neutral If War Comes.

Rome, Feb. 22.—Your correspondent is authorized to state on the highest authority that despite the neutrality of the Holy See, the pope's efforts toward peace and the hopes that Italy will not be dragged into the great war, it is expected that in case of intervention Italian Catholics will be expected to support the government. For this purpose the pope has already instructed the bishops and clergy to beware of the neutralistic propaganda lest they should be accused of being unpatriotic.

The archbishop-elect of Genoa has already addressed a pastoral letter to the diocese of Casale Monferrato, in Piedmont, recommending that the citizens prepare to make every sacrifice, even of their lives, if needed. The letter says the Catholics must obey the king and government implicitly. Similar pastoral letters are to follow in other dioceses.

U. S. SHIP SUNK BY GERMAN MINE

Steamer Evelyn Blown up Off Borkum Island.

WAS IN GERMAN TERRITORY

State Department Gets Official Confirmation—Vessel Was Under Pilot and It Is Supposed Mine Broke Loose—Carried Cargo of Cotton to Bremen.

Berlin, Feb. 22.—(Via London.)—The American steamer Evelyn, which left New York on Jan. 29 with a cargo of cotton for Bremen, struck a mine off Borkum island, in the North sea Saturday. The vessel sank. Her captain and twenty-seven of her crew were saved. It has not been learned what nation placed the mine.

The Evelyn was a single screw steel steamship and was commanded by Captain Smith. She belonged to A. H. Bull & Co. of New York and was chartered by the Harris-Irby Cotton company to take a cargo of cotton to Bremen. She was built in 1883 at Southampton, Eng., and was of 1,936 tons gross burden. She was 252 feet long and 36.3 feet beam.

Wrecked Near Germany.

The island of Borkum, where the Evelyn was sunk by a mine, is only about forty miles from the mouth of the River Ems, which divides Holland from Germany. It is the most easterly of the west Frisian islands, which belong to Holland and is directly north of the most easterly frontier of Holland. Apparently the Evelyn was skirting the coast of Holland and intended to keep near the German coast on the way to Bremen in order to avoid possible mines.

The Evelyn was last reported off Beachy Head on Feb. 15 and should have reached the position off Borkum island, where she was sunk, not more than two days later, although she is a slow ship. So it is believed that she must have been held up temporarily by the English.

She put in at Rotterdam and then proceeded up the Dutch coast toward the mouth of the Weser, on which river the city of Bremen is located.

Probably Loose Mine.

Inasmuch as the Germans must have wanted the cargo of cotton badly, it is presumed that she had a pilot aboard at the time she was struck, to guide her through the mine fields. At least that is the view of her owners, and it is supposed that if she was sunk by a mine it must have been one that had broken loose, a danger against which the skill of the pilot could not prevail.

Germany Not Much to Blame.

Washington, Feb. 22.—Confirmation of reports of the destruction of the American steamship Evelyn off the German coast, presumably by a mine, was received by Secretary of State Bryan. Consul W. T. Fee, at Bremen, Germany, to which the Evelyn was bound with a cargo of cotton, sent the following dispatch to the statement:

"Steamer Evelyn, Captain Smith, agents Bull & Co. New York, blown up early Friday at Borkum. Crew saved. Ship and cargo lost."

Secretary Bryan had the message repeated to the American embassies at London and Berlin with instructions that every possible care be taken of the crew and to ascertain and report to Washington all the facts obtainable in the case.

In German Jurisdiction.

That no serious blame can be attached to the German government for the disaster to the American ship was the conclusion reached here, based upon Consul Fee's dispatch. Borkum is one of a chain of islands southwest of the mouth of Weser river, on which is the port of Bremen. These islands are strongly fortified and form part of the coast defenses and naval bases of Germany in connection with Wilhelmshaven. The islands themselves and adjacent waters, up to the distance of three miles seaward, are within the territorial jurisdiction of Germany, within which she is entitled to lay as many mines as she pleases for the defense of her harbors."

Damages May Be Demanded.

It is surmised here that the Evelyn used the English channel route, passed through the war zone and then presumably went along the safe strip of thirty miles of the Dutch coast. The chain of islands of which Borkum is one is owned partly by Holland and partly by Germany, and the natural course up the coast of Holland would take a vessel by them all.

Should it develop that no notice had been given by Germany of the mining of the waters and that no precautionary measures for giving neutrals safe passage through these waters had been taken, claims for damages will lie against Germany.

Irish Ship Is Sunk.

London, Feb. 22.—The small Irish coasting steamer Downshire was sunk by a German submarine off Calf of Man, an island in the Irish sea. The Germans gave the crew five minutes in which to leave their ship. The crew landed last night at Dundrum County Mayo.

Berlin Claims Foe's Vessel Sunk.

Berlin, Feb. 22.—(Via London.)—An announcement issued at the war office reads as follows: "Near Nieuport an enemy ship, probably a mine searching vessel, touched a mine and sank. Destroyers of the enemy disappeared when shelled."

Norway.

Norway has an area of 124,525 square miles, but of this 73,752 square miles are barren mountains, 20,217 are forest, 4,789 are lakes 4,032 are bogs and 1,947 are snow and ice. Grain fields, cultivated meadows and natural meadows only comprise 3,554 square miles and cultivated land, strictly speaking, only 1,074 square miles.

A TECUMSEH MAN GIVES EVIDENCE

His Testimony Will Interest Every Tecumseh Reader

The value of local evidence is indisputable. It is the kind of evidence we accept as true because we know we can prove it for ourselves. There has been plenty of such evidence in the Tecumseh papers lately, and this straightforwardly testimony has established a confidence in the minds of Tecumseh people that will not be easily shaken.

J. B. Smith, E. Chicago St., Tecumseh says: "I was caused a great deal of suffering by pains in the small of my back. When the attacks were present it was all I could do to work. When stooping, I became very dizzy and spots of fire seemed to flash before my eyes. I rested poorly and in the morning when I got up, was unrefreshed. I doctored and used remedies of various kinds, but got no benefit until I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They made me feel like a different person, ridding me of the trouble. I gladly confirm my former endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills." Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills the same that Mr. Smith had. HOW CAN A WOMAN BANK $2. A WEEK?

Some can't do it. Most can. It depends upon the woman. Make up your account of what you spend weekly. Then cut to the bone your expenditures. Be extravagant only in saving money. Some women will say, "I can't do without this"—"I can't do without that," other women will say "I will do without this." "I will do without that."

SCHOOL REPORT.

The Tecumseh school report for the month ending Jan. 29th is as follows:

Total enrollment for year, 518
High school " " " 121
Total enrollment at date, 471
High school " " " 111
Attendance for month, 93 per cent.
Tardiness " " 18 " "

The low attendance is due largely to colds and throat trouble among the younger children. Tardiness varies from nothing in some rooms up to 6.2 per cent. in others. The last figure is entirely too high and we ask parents to co-operate with us in getting children to school on time.

60th ANNIVERSARY

Lilley State Bank Celebrated with a Large Reception Saturday February 20.

OVER 3,000 ATTENDED

The reception given by the Lilley State bank Saturday afternoon and evening was a very pleasant function and was attended by a large crowd, it being estimated that there were over 3,000 callers.

The reception room was beautifully decorated with boquets of lillies, roses carnations and tulips which were the gifts of numerous bankers complimenting the occasion. A large number of telegrams of congratulation were also received.

F. S. Temple was first in line to receive the guests, meeting each one with a pleasant word of Welcome. A committee in the Directors room were kept busy presenting souvenirs which were a neatly prepared history of the bank from its first opening day to the present; also a dainty little memoranda book, and pencils and whistles for the juvenile callers with the compliments of the bank.

Among the out of-town guests were H. B. C. Hart, Channing Whitney and Ernest Smith, representing the Adrian banks; Mr. Hutchinson of Toledo: Dr. Edgarton, vice president of the Clogan Savings bank of Fremont, Ohio.

Conspicuous on one of the writing desks under the glass, was a letter from H. C. Conkling from Washington D. C. where he is spending the winter, in which he voiced his best wishes for the future of the bank. The same good wishes were echoed by the many friends who gathered on this occasion in response to the invitation tendered them.

WASHINGTON PARTY

Last evening the Presbyterian Sunday-school gave a Washington party at the church parlors, some 200 attending. The rooms were decorated with many flags and portraits of George and Martha occupied prominent positions. Rev. and Mrs. Rex, costumed as Mr. and Mrs. Washington, received the company and quite a number dressed in the garb of "ye olden time"

An excellent program was given in which each class gave a mirth-provoking stunt of such good class that no choice could be made and proved again

"That a little nonsense now and then Is relished by the best of men"

—And maybe the women and children didn't enjoy it, too!

Much excellent music was interspersed throughout the evening, Mrs. C. H. Kemp's vocal organ being no small addition. Refreshments were served, each plate being embellished with a small silken flag. All certainly had a most enjoyable evening.

The streets were filled with conveyances of all kinds and people from far and near, were out for a good time.

The reception at the Lilley State Bank called out a host of friends who made their call, and left their best wishes for the future of the Bank.

The next place of interest was the Tribolet 5 and 10c Store and dishpans were seen in all directions. But not alone these but every business place in town was a scene of activity, and every merchant had a smiling face. "Hail! Gentle Spring" will be the word from now on.

U. S. POSSE TRAP HOSTILE INDIANS

Tse-Ne-Gat's Band Surrounded After Fierce Fight.

NO ADDITIONAL CASUALTIES

Piutes Must Surrender or Be Exterminated Is Report From Bluff, Utah —Bad Indian, Cause of Trouble, Is Charged With Murdering Sheep Herder.

DENVER, COLO. — Reports from Grayson, Utah, by telephone to Dolores, Colo., say that the band of Piute Indians under Tse-Ne-Gat, which fought a desperate battle with a posse commanded by United States Marshal Aquila Nebeker, has been surrounded in Cottonwood Gulch, near Bluff. Leaders of the reinforced posse expected to renew the attack, unless the Indians surrendered.

It was believed that both the original party of redskins with Tse-Ne-Gat and the detachment known as Posey's band, which came to the relief of Tse-Ne-Gat after the battle began, had been cornered in Cottonwood Gulch.

Armed Ranchmen Rush to Aid.

So far as could be learned at Grayson, there were no more casualties after the fighting in which J. C. Akin of Dolores, a member of the posse, and "Jack's Brother" and an unidentified girl, Indians, were killed and several wounded.

Word has been sent throughout the frontier settlements near the Colorado-Utah line, and from all sides has come word that ranchmen are arming and hurrying toward the scene of battle.

The fight started early Sunday morning, when the whites, after several days' journey by wagon from Cortez, Col., arrived at the camp of Tse-Ne-Gat, a Piute leader, whose arrest on a charge of murder was sought.

Tse-Ne-Gat's Alleged Crime.

Tse-Ne-Gat, who also is known as Everett Hatch, is charged with the murder last March of Juan Chacon, a sheep herder in Montezuma county, Colorado. After his arrest the Indian escaped to Utah, where his father, "Old Polk," is said to have advised resistance. The band of which Tse-Ne-Gat is the leader is known as an uncontrollable nomadic tribe which has on many occasions given settlers of southeastern Utah trouble.

According to the version of three Indians of the Navajo Springs agency, Tse-Ne-Gat met Chacon on a highway. They rode together for half a mile, when Chacon is believed to have confided in the Indian that he had just received him pay. At a fork in the road Tse-Ne-Gat waved Chacon goodby. Later a shot from ambush felled Chacon from his horse.

JOHNSON-WILLARD GO OFF?

Big Juarez Fight Postponed—Johnson Is at Havana.

HAVANA, CUBA. — Jack Johnson, the pugilist, who arrived at Havana from Cienfuegos with his white wife, was put out of the Hotel Plaza soon after he had finished his breakfast. He is now stopping with a Cuban family, and while three fight promoters are bidding for his services the authorities are very willing to listen to any request the United States may make for his extradition. Johnson's proposed fight with Willard at Juares on March 6 has been indefinitely postponed.

The bidding for Johnson's professional services began soon after he was installed in his new quarters. Three promoters, all of them ready and willing to meet his terms, said they wanted him to fight Sam McVey. McVey's manager, Lawrence, declares he has already tied Johnson up with a contract to fight his man in Havana in April or late in March. Johnson boastingly says that neither McVey nor any others can make him raise a good sweat.

Senate Passes House Bill for 1916 Referendum on Prohibition.

HELENA, MONT. — The state senate passed the house state wide prohibition bill, offered as a substitute to the senate bill, providing for a constitutional amendment.

Germany Not Blockaded.

LONDON — Complaints at the government's delay in enforcing the blockade or whatever reprisals have been decided upon against Germany are voiced again in the morning papers. The Mail says the British nation is laboring under the delusion that Germany is being subjected to a strict blockade, while the very reverse is the fact. Food and raw materials, the paper says, still are being imported into Germany.

"POISON PEN" PASTOR REFUSES TO QUIT JOB

Rev. Devona, Convicted of Slandering Warden, Defies Bishop.

ST. CLAIR, MICH. — A church congregation rent in twain, its pastor under a cloud, and the personal representative of Bishop Williams of Detroit defied was the spectacle presented at the opening service in St. Paul's Episcopal church.

W. L. Sayres of Detroit, general missionary of the Episcopal diocese of Michigan, presented a written demand from Bishop Williams that Rev. F. S. Devona vacate the pulpit of the church. Upon Rev. Devona's refusal to comply Mr. Sayres pinned a copy of the demand to the front pew and withdrew.

The sensation came as the result of an investigation started months ago by Dr. James W. Inches of St. Clair, warden of the church, who had been accused by Rev. Devona and others of writing "poison pen" letters reflecting on the character of Rev. Devona. This investigation had extended to England and also to the vatican in Rome.

The letters were in imitation of the handwriting of Dr. Inches, and after their receipt the rector would accuse the warden of writing them. The vatican, in reply to inquiries, denied that Devona had ever been a Catholic priest, as he claimed to have been.

PLANS NEW SUFFRAGE BILL

Senator Straight, Coldwater, May Introduce Measure.

LANSING, MICH. — Notwithstanding the fact that the suffrage bill which was to have been introduced by Representative Charles Flowers of Detroit was never introduced, there are indications that the suffrage question may yet come to the front at the present session of the legislature.

Mr. Flowers had a law patterned after the Illinois law allowing women to vote for president and vice president and for all positions established by the legislature, but it did not allow them to vote at elections and for positions established by the constitution.

TRADE COMMISSION NAMED BY WILSON

George Rublee Is New Man on Revised Slate.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — President Wilson nominated the following persons to be members of the new United States trade commission:

Joseph E. Davis of Madison, Wis., present commissioner of corporations.

William J. Harris of Cedartown, Ga., present director of the census.

William H. Parry of Seattle, Wash., newspaper editor.

George Rublee of Cornish, N. H., lawyer.

The nominations constitute a slate which has already been discounted in the press. With the exception of Mr. Rublee, who was in competition with George L. Record of New Jersey, both Progressives, for a place on the commission, semi-official announcements of their probable appointments have been definitely made. Messrs. Davies, Hurley and Harris are Democrats, while Mr. Parry is a Progressive Republican and Mr. Rublee a Progressive.

A fight will be made over the confirmation of the appointees.

BLAZE BURNS OUT 2 PAPERS

Des Moines Register and Leader and Tribune Plant Destroyed.

DES MOINES, IA. — The building and entire plant of the Register and Leader, and Des Moines Tribune, afternoon, newspapers, were destroyed by fire. The loss exceeds $200,000, about three-fourths of which was covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is not certain. It broke out about 7 o'clock, after the night force had left.

Gardner Cowles, publisher and principal owner of the two papers, said the plant would be rebuilt immediately. Temporary quarters in the Des Moines Daily Capital offices were accepted by Mr. Cowles, and no issues of either the Register and Leader or the Tribune will be ommitted.

Use of Dutch Flag Forbidden.

AMSTERDAM — The Nieuwe Courant points out that Sir Edward Grey's contention in the British reply to the American note, that the use of a neutral flag is forbidden by other countries, is not correct, as, according to the Dutch code, foreign skippers sailing under the Dutch flag are liable to imprisonment for one year and a fine up to $120.

Kaiser's Relative Slain.

AMSTERDAM — A dispatch from Berlin to the Amsterdam Telegraaf says Lieutenant Count von Bassewitz-Levetzow, son of the premier of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and brother-inlaw of Prince Oscar, fifth son of Emperor William, has been killed in the eastern zone of war.

GERMANS IN NEW MOVE ON WARSAW

Kaiser Concentrating Troops For Blow at Pole Capital.

NEW BATTLES IN PROGRESS

Russ Hurl Back Dual Foe at Several Points in Eastern Battle Front—Turks Abandon Drive at Egypt—Russians Mass For Raid on Constantinople.

PETROGRAD — The Germans are making terrific efforts to press on to the great fortress Novo Georgiewsk guarding Warsaw from the north, it was officially admitted here.

Strong bodies of the kaiser's troops are passing in a southwesterly direction along the Bohr and Narew rivers toward Przasnyz, where a great German force is concentrating. These comprise several divisions that participated in Von Hindenburg's campaign against the Russians in East Prussia.

New Battles in Progress.

New battles have begun southwest of Przasnyz, where the Germans from the Mazurian lakes region have affected a junction with the army moving upon Novo Georgiewsk from the northwest, in the Plonsk region. In official circles the new German drive upon Warsaw is not viewed with alarm, but the grand duke's forces in this region are being strongly re-enforced.

The fighting around the fortress of Ossowiec and west of Grodno continues, with the Ossowiec fortress by swinging around the forts to the north. So close has the enemy approached to Ossowiec that the guns of the outer defenses have been brought into play. The fighting here and near Grodno, however, is regarded as incidental to the main German movement upon Novo Georgiewsk.

The government and the Petrograd papers made no attempt to conceal from the public the fact that the grand duke's army had met with series reverses in East Prussia. It is pointed out, however, that in the Carpathians the Rusians continue a successful defense of important passes.

Fifteen Hundred Austrians Taken.

Repulses of the Austrians and Germans at several points on the western battle front are claimed by the Russians in an official communication. It is stated that in eastern Galicia, southeast of Stanislau, two brigades of Austrians were driven off with a loss of 1,500 prisoners, including twenty officers and several machine guns.

Norwegian Steamer Sunk.

LONDON — The Norwegian coal steamer Regin, carrying coal to Bordeaux, was sunk off Dover by a submarine or a mine. The crew was saved.

Turks Retire From Suez.

LONDON — The Daily Mail correspondent at Cairo telegraphs:

"The Turks now have made practically a general retreat to Damascus. Only unimportant forces remained in Beersheba on Friday. Fears for their lines of communications caused the Ottomans to fall back headlong."

A dispatch to the Daily Telegraph from Athens says that the Turks, expecting the entrance of the allied fleet into the Sea of Marmora, have sent troops and heavy artillery to all the islands in that sea.

Russ to Attack Constantinople?

COPENHAGEN — The Deutsche Tages Zeitung publishes an official dispatch from Sofia, which says the Russians are concentrating large forces at Odessa in readiness to ship them to Midia, on the Black sea, sixty miles northwest of Constantinople, for an attack on Constantinople.

ALLIES RAIDED BY ZEPPELINS

Four Persons Killed by Bomb Droppers at Calais.

PARIS — A Zeppelin air ship crossed the allied lines near Nieuport and dropped bombs upon Calais, killing four persons. The Zeppelin evidently started from Zeebrugge, Belgium, held by the Germans. After shelling Calais it turned about toward Dunkirk, supposedly with the intention of dropping bombs upon the English army headquarters. En route to Dunkirk several more bombs were thrown from the air ship, damaging several houses along the Calais to Dunkirk railroad.

Fusillades from allies' riflemen caused the crew of the Zeppelin to change their course. The big air ship turned her nose seaward and was lost to view off Dunkirk.

Paper Read by Mrs. N. A. Howland at the Monday Club on Historical Day

EARLY HISTORY OF LENAWEE COUNTY.

N[illegible] ago this winter what we now call Lenawee County lay a trackless part of the forest of the then almost unknown Territory of Michigan—trackless and unknown, except to the native Indians and wild animals whose home it had been since the memory of man. At Detroit was a little village of 1400 people, about the site which Clinton has now attained, and at Monroe (then called Frenchtown) another settlement and the Jesuit missionaries had been busy at Marquette.

After the war of 1812 the government wishing to reward our soldiers for their services, granted 2,000,000 acres of land situated in the Territory of Michigan to be known as "Military Bounty Lands." The surveyors sent to look this land over gave a very unfavorable report, describing it as low wet land, covered with marshes, and in their opinion there would not be more than one acre out of a hundred, if there would be more than one out of a thousand, which would admit of cultivation. This report changed the plans of the government for rewarding its veterans and it also discouraged immigration. The wagon trains of settlers went on past our plains and hillsides, making a detour to the south of us thus avoiding a country which had been so disparagingly described.

A government land office was opened at Monroe for the sale of land in Lenawee county which had been previously surveyed (1819) and by proclamation of President Monroe was put on the market by public offering the following June. Persons in Detroit already interested in the settlement of the country, availed themselves of this opportunity to acquire land at the price of $1 25 an acre, and solicited some friends in the east to form a colony for that purpose.

The result of this effort was that a little band of settlers, of whom Musgrove Evans was the leading spirit, came on from Jefferson county, N. Y., to make themselves a home in Michigan. It is an often recited tale of how they landed at Detroit, secured an Indian guide with a pony to carry their baggage, followed the Chicago trail until they reached the Raisin a little above where the village of Clinton is now, dismissed their escort and followed the stream a little farther on to the point where Evans Creek unites with it and camped on the spot where Tecumseh now stands.

Here they found good water power and other advantages for a colony and June 2d, 1824, brought their families and some neighbors, a party consisting in all of 15 men, 4 women and 11 children, and built the first house in Lenawee county.

A few years before this the Indian tribes, Pottawatamies, Chippewas, Wyandottes and Ottawas, had released their claim in a treaty with Governor Hull (1807) but an interesting evidence of their occupancy remained. Less than half a mile away from the place chosen by our first settlers for their dwelling, on a level spot slightly elevated above the surrounding ground, was a square embankment four feet high enclosing a quarter of an acre in space. Near by and connected with it was a circular embankment about ten rods in circumference in the center of which was a bowl shaped opening five or six feet deep.

In this pit a fire of bark and sacred herbs was built and there at a certain time of the moon in June a white dog was burned to appease the wrath of the Great Spirit who rules over war and famine. Here the tribes were wont to assemble and smoke the pipe of peace and here it is said Tecumseh often met with them in council to decide whether it should be war or peace with their pale face neighbors. Although these meetings were no longer held after the arrival of our little colony, yet the place was very much as the Indians had left it and was known as "the old Indian dancing ground."

Three well worn trails led from this spot, one northeast to Detroit, one southeast to Monroe and one west to Chicago. This trail was followed as far as could be by the government later in laying out the Territorial Road.

The little hut that housed that collective family during the winter of 24-'25 was made of logs with a roof of bark and was without floor or chimney, the smoke escaping through the roof and in the summer time the cooking was done outside with a "bake kettle" over the coals.

Let us imagine Mrs. Evans getting supper, (six o'clock dinners were not yet.) She was assisted by Mrs. Benson no doubt, for her name is frequently mentioned as one of the party, and let us remember that they had fifteen men, four women, and eleven children to serve.

Did she turn on the gasoline O, No! she had been dead several years before that luxury to the housewife had been brought into use. Did she light a wood fire with a match? No, there was not a match in the country until ten years after (1834). She raked over the coals in a fire outside, (if they were not out), and if perhaps they were and it had been raining, she found some punk inside where it had been kept dry, and then she struck a flint with a hammer several times before the spark happened to light on the punk and set a smouldering blaze. She did not telephone the City Bakery for bread, nor turn a faucet for city water, for that supper, but took an iron teakettle down to a spring (just back of where our memorial boulder now stands) and filled it there, standing on a plank which had been put there for that purpose. One day after that her little son, aged two ran out on the same plank, fell into the water and was drowned. He was a babe of fourteen months when his mother made that tiresome journey with him to this new country and he lies beside her in our cemetery with others of the family.

We may imagine that in preparing that evening meal there was venison, bear meat, wild turkey, honey, cranberries, or maple sugar, for all these the Indians brought them in exchange for whatever the whites could give. There were not many dishes with which to set the table, and we might imagine that the fifteen children of the company had to wait until the elders were served, for Mr Evans in writing to his brother in law Gen Brown who a little later than this returned east for supplies says, "If thee could bring a stove and a little more earthenware for use at meal time it would add to our comfort greatly."

Mr. Evans was a surveyor, and laid out the village plat. It was enacted by the legislature that in laying out the village, four squares should be set apart for public benefit, one for the court house and jail, one for a public promenade, one for a cemetery, and one for a military parade ground, and also build a bridge across the river Raisin east of the village. These conditions Evans, Brown and Co. accepted, and proceeded to perpetuate their own memories by taking care that a street should be named for each. So we have an Evans street, an Evans creek, a Brown street and a suburb named Brownville. Then they went through the list of Indian names and we have a Shawnee St., a Maumee St., a Wyandotte St., an Oneida St., a Pottawatamie and a Killbuck St., after all the Indians they knew, until the list was exhausted. Did they name any street for Mrs. Evans? No. Did they ever name anything for her but the little gray grave stone in the west end of our cemetery? (and they gave her that too late for her to appreciate the honor.) Of course all these names which our streets bear were names of male Indians, (I remember nothing much being named for the squaws except a certain brand of tobacco.) Mrs. Evans name was Abi. It is a bible name and the scriptural character who bore it was the daughter of one king of Jerusalem and the mother of another king (II Kings 18:2) who reigned twenty-nine years in the same city, surely Abi's name would have looked well on our village map. But they forgot the woman who cooked their venison and bear meat, though it was her cooking, and her brave and patient spirit which made their work possible. Eight years she lived here, courageous, never giving up and returning to the land whence she had come, cheerful and patient we are told, making a comfortable home for those of her own kin and also for the transients who came this way. Her loving service made possible the successful settlement of this town, for if those sturdy pioneers had been obliged to rely upon a woman of different calibre, a weakling, their work would have been impossible.

Here within the incorporate limits of this village she spent her best years. Here to her the first white child in the county was born: here two other of this young mother's children were laid. She was a young woman—that is, she would now be considered so, but pioneer life was hard on pioneer mothers, and the records show they died early and were old at 40 and the little gray grave stone says this one was 43.

We can scarcely imagine her surroundings, she was so isolated from the folks she had left behind. No steam cars to take her back to them; they were several hundred miles distant by ox team (not a locomotive engine until 1830). She could not telegraph them that a new baby had come to cheer the home in the wilderness (the telegraph was not in operation until 1846). She could not call them up by telephone and hear their beloved voices over the wire.

But she could write them for 25 cents—25 cents for each scrap of paper in the letter, and the government decreed that it must be silver which would be accepted for postage. The country was filled in '37 and '38 with wild cat money. Specie was hard to get and sometimes (as the letters were prepaid or not, at the writer's pleasure) a letter from home might wait a week before the necessary bit of silver was found. When the letter was written it was carried by Indian pony to Ypsilanti, mail going there once a week and to Detroit once a month.

It is a far cry from those times to ours. We now have two cent postage, one cent postcards, rural free delivery and the parcel post, and for means of transportation we have discarded the Indian pony. Steam cars have taken his place and if fast mail and telegraph are both too slow we may speak to our friends in San Francisco.

Mrs. Evans had neither paper nor magazine. Only letters from home contained news and that had been so long in transit that it could hardly be called current.

After her work here was done and she lay down beneath the little gray grave stone, beside the two children who were not permitted to go on, the father, still possessed of the spirit of adventure which had brought him here, removed with his two sons to Texas, which was just then in the midst of her conflict with Mexico. Here he died and the two sons helped in the making of their country's history by falling with David Crockett in defense of the Alamo.

They had made a path through this wilderness and had obeyed Kipling's injunction to other pathfinders, "Go make them with your living and mark them with your dead." And some of these markings are here with us still.

I wish I might show you the spot, if you are not already familiar with it. The stone is quaint and old fashioned in shape and quality. A tall gloomy evergreen grows close beside it so that it is perpetually in the shadow, and the western sunlight which lights up the other near by markers never falls here. The inscription is indented and is so discolored and moss grown that one can with difficulty make out the words which read "Abi Evans died 3d month 5th 1832 aged 43 yrs." On the other side are two smaller stones each bearing the inscription of a child of this woman, one a boy aged two and the other a girl aged eleven.

In '32 a government road was built from Detroit to Chicago (then called Ft. Dearborn) following the old Indian trail along the high places. It was used to transport troops from one fort to the other during the Blackhawk and other Indian wars and as a means of travel across the country. This road runs across our county on its northern boundary entering in Macon township and leaving in Rollin.

It is this road, I understand, which the Clinton club wish to mark though they possess neither terminus of it. A great mania for marking things has swept across the club woman's sky. We are born imitators and because the D. A. R. and other patriotic societies have "lest we forget" created a very praiseworthy sentiment for preserving historical spots we begin forthwith with parrot-like alacrity to mark everything in sight.

We are asked to mark roads though they are in no danger of being destroyed and will probably be in good condition long after any marker we may erect. We are asked to mark the post taverns along this road and many other things of less interest. Mark a road and not mark the resting place of those who made that road necessary? For it was mainly to protect the straggling hamlets and lonely settlements that these roads were made. Mark post taverns where chance pioneer travellers stopped for a night, and not mark the place where those lie who were with us for years?

In '32 another road was made which ran from LaPlaisance Bay at Monroe to a point where it connected with the Territorial Road in Cambridge. It was here in 1848 that Fenimore Cooper stayed to get the proper background and coloring for his story of the bee hunter, called "Oak Openings."

The LaPlaisance Bay road runs through our town, our main street being a part of it. It was a great artery of travel in '35 and '40 and several old taverns still mark its route across the country.

Tecumseh is particularly rich in local historical spots for it was from Tecumseh that all settlement radiated and we may say that all Tecumseh settlement radiated from the little bark roofed cabin on the Raisin where Abi Evans cooked and worked for the "15 men, 4 women and 11 children" whom history says were lodged there.

Franklin boasts the first soldier's monument in the state, perhaps in the country. It marks the sacrifice of the many whose lives went out in the clash of battle with the eyes of a nation focused on them, and their home town paid them the loyal tribute of a shaft in the village cemetery which tells of their heroic deeds.

Our woman's life went out with no heroics, no music or flags flying. She "wrapped the drapery of her couch about her and lay down to pleasant dreams," but was not hers a battle? And was it less glorious because it came to her here in the wilderness alone? It was a woman's battle, but not without importance in the making of our country's history and we leave our comrade "unhonored and unsung."

We have riches which our sister towns can never claim: Clinton has six miles of government road running along her northern boundary. Adrian has only the court house and, as that was moved over from here, it is for her rather a second hand distinction. They have also a monument to Aunt Laura Haviland, but she did not belong to them—her home when in the state was in Raisin. They borrowed the great abolitionist from a neighboring town to ornament their public square. Circumstances have made it unnecessary for us to borrow any such distinguishing mark. We have here nearly all of the interesting pioneer history of the county.

To recapitulate: Clinton has six miles of a road which is several hundred miles long. Cambridge has the point on that road where Cooper wrote one of his tales. Franklin has the first soldier's monument. Adrian possesses a second hand court house and a borrowed statue. Tecumseh has the rest.

Shall Tecumseh ask the county to help us mark our own? Just as we would not allow the county to care for one of our friends living, so we should not allow it to care for our dead. It is plainly our duty to do this before we are solicited or reminded by other clubs to attend to it. Let us preserve these places, leaving (if we like to count it so) our efforts in this direction as a monument at the same time to ourselves.

It would seem that the representative women's clubs of the town should do this in memory of the First White Woman in Lenawee County. It would also seem that this club should take the initiative in the matter for a more particular and intimate reason.

Near this little gray grave stone and across the drive, rests a former president of our club, Mrs. Geo. N. Stacy, who in passing on did not forget to beautify our "silent city" with a bequest such as no other of our townswoman has done for us. Both of these women were fine representative types of the times in which they lived and above the average mark. Though nearly a century apart, these lives are two milestones in the march of civilization as far as the progress of women is concerned. Should not the present pay respectful homage to what is best in the lives of the women of the past, though a hundred remarkable years lie between? Remarkable in so many ways, in advance in learning, in science, in discoveries of different kinds, and in the improved condition of women and of public sentiment regarding them. Let us who have everything at our command not forget the resting place of her who had so little of what we now consider necessary and who did so well with the little she had.

"He who fights and runs away will live to fight some other day" and he who finds fault with prevailing conditions without being able to suggest a remedy should belong to the same class. There is no doubt a note of warning in this "Safety First" motto which should be heeded, still I wish to have the courage of my convictions and, regardless of consequences, suggest a remedy, for some of the reasons why we as a club cannot do some of the good things which we might often wish to do.

The men who make the funny(?) papers consider Women's Clubs a joke which they place at the head of the column near that musty old mother-in-law joke, and we no doubt merit some of the derision for we are too often inconsistent. A membership of over twenty years with this club has revealed to me some seasons of great financial distress, still once each year of late we have tried to give some sort of entertainment to the men which would not bore them too much, and we have not always been able to successfully accomplish this. We have been obliged sometimes to deny ourselves some things which as a club we really ought to have had, but we went on feeding them angel cake regardless of expense. Then fearing that they were tiring of our efforts to please in that way, we have varied the programme by giving them some sort of entertainment intended to be educational, thinking ourselves public benefactors, and, instead of there being "standing room only" as we had a right to expect there would be, we have been obliged to go out into the highways and byways (mostly byways) and compel them to come in.

They accuse us of "pink teas" and gossip and of trying to acquire a very thin veneer of culture and learning. Why not conserve our resources, financial and mental? Why feed our critics at all? Why give them a lecture or other entertainment? Why not let them go to the men's clubs to feed, where there is no gossip and where there is no danger of their being bored? There they can read the funny(?) paper for what information they wish on the work of Woman's Clubs.

Let us save our good money for something worth while, something for ourselves and the pioneer women who went before. When we are again inclined to feast the men, let us remember Mrs. Evans who fed so many men for over eight years and received the late reward of only a little gray grave stone, under a big lonesome evergreen where the snows of eighty-three winters have now fallen.

PRIMARY ELECTION

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That a GENERAL PRIMARY ELECTION will be held in the Township of Tecumseh, County of Lenawee, State of Michigan at the Council building within said Township, on Wednesday, March 3 A. 1 Circuit Judge for the 39th judicial circuit of Michigan, to fill vacancy, caused by the death of Hon. John L. O'Mealey, for the unexpired term ending January 1, 1918.

SUGGESTIONS RELATIVE TO VOTING

First find the column on the ballot containing the name of your political party. Then mark a cross in the circle under the name of your party. To make your vote count, you must put a cross in the square before the names of such candidates as you wish to vote for. If you wish to vote for some one whose name is not on the ballot, write it in, and put a cross before the name. If you neglect to make a cross in the square under the name of your political party but do make a cross before the name of one or more candidates in any party column, your vote will be counted as to candidates having a cross before their names, provided they are all contained within one party column, but if candidates are thus voted for in more than one party column, in such case the whole ballot will be thrown out. Please note also that no vote will be counted for any one unless there is a cross before his name.

THE POLLS of said election will be open at 7 o'clock a m. and will remain open until 5 o'clock p. m unless the Board of Election Inspectors shall in their discretion adjourn the polls at 12 o'clock noon for one hour.

The street commissioner has been ordered to remove all bill board signs that have been so conspicuous on the corners of our business streets. Doughnuts

That will remain moist.

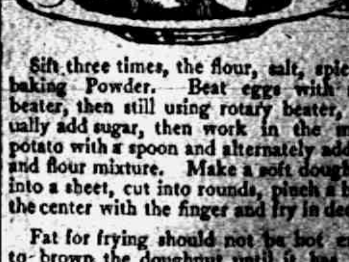
Every housewife who bakes her own bread knows that if a little potato is added to the sponge, the bread will not dry out as quickly. In this recipe potato is utilized to make doughnuts that will remain moist and fresh for several days.

K C will be found to have distinct advantages over any other Baking Powder for doughnuts. K C is a double acting baking powder with which a large batch of doughnuts may be mixed and fried a few at a time. The last will be as light and nice as the first.

K C Potato Doughnuts

By Mrs. Nevada Briggs, of Baking School fame.

3½ cups flour; 2 eggs; 1 cup sugar; 4 level teaspoonfuls K C Baking Powder; ½ teaspoonful salt; ¼ teaspoonful mace; 1 cup cold mashed potato; ½ cup milk, or more if needed.



Sift three times, the flour, salt, spice and baking Powder. Beat eggs with rotary beater, then still using rotary beater, gradually add sugar, then work in the mashed potato with a spoon and alternately add milk and flour mixture. Make a soft dough, roll into a sheet, cut into rounds, pinch a hole in the center with the finger and fry in deep fat.

Fat for frying should not be hot enough to brown the doughnut until it has risen. When the doughnut is dropped into the fat it sinks to the bottom. As soon as it comes up it should be turned and turned a number of times while cooking. This recipe is excellent as they do not take the fat in frying and will stay moist for days.

HOW CAN A WOMAN BANK $2. A WEEK?

Some can't do it. Most can. It depends upon the woman. Make up your account of what you spend weekly. Then cut to the bone your expenditures. Be extravagant only in saving money. A LETTER FROM FANNY CROSBY

When a child of nine years of age Mrs. M. H. Taylor being in delicate health, was taken by her father to New York City for treatment. While there it was her privilege to make the acquaintance of Fanny Crosby and spent many happy hours in her society.

Time and miles have separated them but the memory of those early days has abided. Ten years ago seeing her picture in a paper, Mrs. Taylor wrote to Miss Crosby asking if she remembered her little friend and received the following letter in reply.

Bridgeport, Conn,
Feb. 3, 1905

My dear Friend:
Of the olden time,

I am very glad to hear from you and remember you quite well, and am pleased to know you have not forgotton me. I thank you so much for the little holder of holly and shall keep it in remembrance of you and the times long ago.

You will remember me kindly to your husband and son and daughters. Am thankful that time has dealt so well with you, and shall be glad to hear from you again. The book of poems that was printed years ago and are out of print now but Bigelow & Main Co. 135 Fifth Ave, New York City have published a book called "Bells at Evening" which contains some of my best hymns, some secular poems a short autobiography and a good photograph at least my friends say it is good and they sell the book at 50c a copy. I am writing a story of my life and hymns but it will not be out for some months yet.

A dear friend of mine had begun to make arrangements for my birthday. She had been taken ill and the ones who were helping her have appealed to me to send some of the enclosed clippings to all my friends hoping that they will have them in as many of the papers as possible.

Sincerely your friend,
Fanny Crosby

A TECUMSEH MAN GIVES EVIDENCE

His Testimony Will Interest Every Tecumseh Reader

The value of local evidence is indisputable. It is the kind of evidence we accept as true because we know we can prove it for ourselves. There has been plenty of such evidence in the Tecumseh papers lately, and this straightforwardly testimony has established a confidence in the minds of Tecumseh people that will not be easily shaken.

J. B. Smith, E. Chicago St., Tecumseh says: "I was caused a great deal of suffering by pains in the small of my back. When the attacks were present it was all I could do to work. When stooping, I became very dizzy and spots of fire seemed to flash before my eyes. I rested poorly and in the morning when I got up, was unrefreshed. I doctored and used remedies of various kinds but got no benefit until I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They made me feel like a different person, ridding me of the trouble. I gladly confirm my former endorsement of Doan's Kidney Pills." Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills the same that Mr. Smith had. CATARRH OF HEAD AND STOMACH

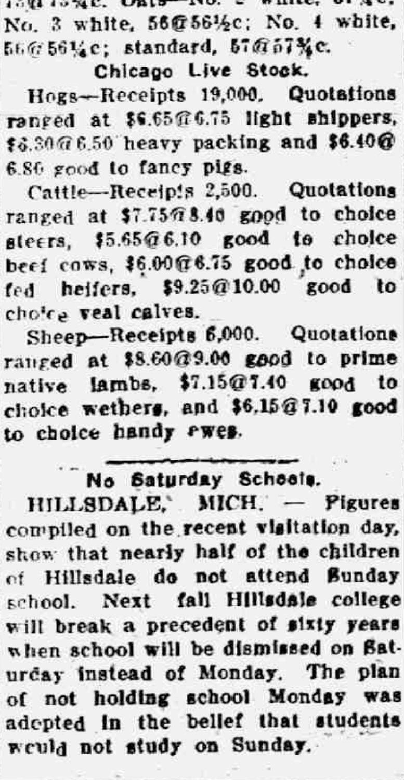
Took Peruna Five Bottles Cured Me



Mr. Frank Richter, No. 309 East Second St., Winona, Minn., writes: "My catarrh was principally located in my head and stomach. I tried many remedies without success. I tried several doctors, but they were unable to cure me. I read of Peruna in the papers, and five bottles cured me.

"As a remedy for catarrh I take pleasure in recommending Peruna for catarrh of the stomach. I know what it is to be afflicted with this awful disease and consider it my duty to say a word in behalf of the remedy which gave me such relief. Peruna cured me, and I know it will cure any one else who suffers from this disease. It gives me great pleasure to testify to the curative effects of this medicine. Peruna is a well tested and frequently used remedy, and for catarrh of the stomach it is unsurpassed."

As a rule, people when ailing apply very properly to a doctor before resorting to a ready-to-take medicine. The great majority are cured by the doctor. But a per cent. of chronic cases fail to find a cure and at last begin to use ready-to-take medicines. It is very noticeable indeed the number of people among our testifiers who say that it was only after the doctor had failed to cure them that they were induced to take Peruna. Then they find to their relief, to their surprise, to their joy, that Peruna is the remedy they should have taken at first.

Where Wives Are Kept Under.

A Chinese Mrs. Caudle is inconceivable, for she would promptly be returned to her father labeled "Too muchee bhoberry." Only by one means can the lady obtain any right whatever to use even the mild moral suasion wherewith the tactful western wife is wont to turn events to her liking. If as a bride the Chinese woman succeeded in sitting on any corner of her husband's clothes at the moment when, halfway through the nuptial ceremonials, they first seat themselves side by side she is understood to occupy the position of mistress in her own house. Even then it generally stops at understanding.—From "Things Seen In China," by J. R. Chitty.

SEARCHLIGHTS IN WAR.

How They Are Worked by Distant Control in Land Operations.

In modern warfare the searchlight is invaluable. On dark nights at sea it is the only means of guarding against torpedo boats, which its beams will reveal at a distance of two miles and more.

On shore it is the electric eye of the army. It is carried to all parts of the field of action by motor trucks, and the motor that propels the vehicle drives the electric generator that supplies the current for the light.

Most of these field searchlights are not directed by hand, for each instrument is fitted with what is known as the distant control. Two small motors govern the vertical and the horizontal movements of the light. From them an electric cable runs to the station of the operator, who, although he may be several hundred feet away, can send the rays of the light in any direction he pleases.

According to the Navy and Army Illustrated, one advantage of this distant control is that the objects picked up by the beam of light can be sighted more quickly and more definitely, for if the operator stands behind the light and looks along the beam his vision is hampered by a luminous haze. A second advantage is that the light can be placed in an exposed position without endangering the men who run it. Were the operator and officer beside the apparatus they would be certain to receive the fire that is sure to be poured upon a searchlight and would suffer the instant the range was found.

VIRTUE OF AN APPLE.

At One Time the Fruit Was Called the "Food of the Gods."

The apple has become so familiar as the commonest of all fruits that its value as man's greatest friend in the vegetable kingdom may not be fully realized. It was called the "food of the gods" because it was believed to be the magic renewer of youth to which the gods resorted when they felt themselves growing old and feeble.

There have been many mystic traditions about the apple, which has been credited with varied potency. It is the healing fruit of the Arabian tales. Latin chronicles and institutes and early English poems contain many references to it. Scientific analysis of late years has justified all the ancient glorification of this fruit, which has been found to contain albumen, sugar, gum, malic acid, gallic acid, fiber, water and phosphorus.

Malic acid of apples neutralizes the excess of chalky matter caused by too much meat and thereby helps to keep us young. Apples are good for the complexion, as their acids drive out the noxious matters which cause skin eruptions. They are good for the brain, which those same noxious matters, if retained, render sluggish. The acids of the apple diminish the acidity of the stomach that comes with some forms of indigestion.

The phosphorus, of which apples contain a larger per cent than any other fruit or vegetable, renews the essential matter of the brain and spinal column. —Boston Herald.

Does Your Spine Shiver?

"A shivering spine," said a psychologist, "is the one infallible proof of an artistic temperament. Does a shiver run up and down your spine when you listen to beautiful music or read a lovely poem or look at a superb painting? If not the gates of art are closed to you forever. All great artists and all good critics experience this shivering sensation of the backbone before a worthy work of art. Some of these men use the shiver as a measure. The work that does not evoke it they pronounce a failure. My own spine shivers best to music. The violin solo that precedes the last act of Massenet's 'Thais' sets up in me a tremolo movement that wrinkles the back of my coat."—Exchange.

Napoleon as an Editor.

The Almanach de Gotha was already of sufficient importance over a century ago to prompt a dispatch from Napoleon. On Oct. 20, 1807, he wrote to Champagny, his foreign minister, complaining that "the latest edition of the Almanach de Gotha is full of errors, no account having been taken of the changes wrought by me in Germany. Tell the minister from Gotha to call on you and inform him that this must be set right in the forthcoming edition. Insist on seeing the section devoted to Germany before the edition is published."

THIS WOMAN WAS VERY UNHAPPY

Monmouth, Ill.:—"I was weak, worn-out and nervous. I had no appetite and was getting so thin and discouraged, one day I just broke down and cried when a friend came in and asked me what was the matter. I told of my condition and how nothing I took seemed to do me any good. Vinol was suggested. I got a bottle and before it was half gone I could eat and sleep well. I continued its use and now my friends say I look ten years younger, and I am well, healthy and strong. I wish I could induce every tired-out, worn-out, nervous woman to take Vinol."—Mrs. HARRIET GALE, Monmouth, Ill.

WOMAN DOCTOR HELD FOR DEATH OF GIRL

Grayling Is Stirred Over Alleged Criminal Operation.

BAY CITY, MICH. — Dr. Raye Snyder Everett, well known woman physician of this city, was arrested on a charge of malpractice in connection with the death of Mrs. Evart Buchanan, who died of peritonitis in Mercy hospital at Grayling on Feb. 6.

Prosecuting Attorney James L. McCormick issued the warrant on the application of the dead woman's father, Frank Woodruff of Grayling. It is alleged that a criminal operation was performed on Mrs. Buchanan while she was in this city on a visit.

The father charges that the operation was suggested to his daughter, but that she would not consent to it and alleges that it was performed under the guise of adjusting a minor disorder and that the fatal illness was the result.

Mrs. Buchanan was nineteen years old. After her death a coroner's inquest was held and the jury found that she came to her death through malpractice.

The case has aroused Grayling, where the Woodruff family is prominent.

HARD CASE TO BE DROPPED

Father Who Took Daughter Out of State Not to Be Sought.

SAGINAW, MICH. — No further legal attempt will be made to obtain the custody of seven year old Elizabeth Hard, who, it is said, was taken Thursday morning, while on her way to school, by her father, Herbert A. Hard, and hustled out of the county in a taxicab and later taken out of the state.

According to the prosecuting attorney, no court action is possible other than a warrant for non-support, and a warrant of this nature is not serious enough to justify extradition. Attorneys for Mrs. Hard and the prosecutor conferred and decided not to continue the case. Mr. and Mrs. Hard, it is reported, were never divorced. They signed an agreement disposing of property rights and giving the custody of the children to Mrs. Hard when they separated.

The trial lasted six weeks. The struggle which resulted in Cook's death occurred at the home of Riley Mullendore, near here on Christmas night, 1913, and Mullendore has been in jail since that time. The first trial of the case at Lafayette resulted in a disagreement of the jury.

MICHIGAN RAILROADS APPEALING FOR RELIEF

The Question of the Hour—Why the Railroads in the State Should Be Allowed An Increase in the Present Legal Passenger Rate.

Lansing, Mich., March 1st, 1915.

The managers of the Michigan railroads have been at Lansing for the last week or ten days making an appeal to the legislators to pass a law which will give them the right to charge a passenger rate of three cents per mile in the Upper Peninsula and 2½ cents per mile in the Lower Peninsula, because every railroad in the state is losing money on every passenger they carry at the present 2-cent rate. They have submitted arguments and statements in favor of this change which have not been successfully contradicted, and the sentiment is growing every day in favor of the passage of such a law. The statements which they have submitted have been compiled in as simple form as possible by the auditing departments of the railroads under established rules and regulations laid down by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and should be convincing to every person who will take the time to read them and give them intelligent consideration. These figures show that practically every passenger carried by every railroad in the State of Michigan—amounting to 23,613,208 for the year ending December 31, 1914—was carried at a loss of from 6 to 50 cents per passenger, without figuring in any expenditures for interest on bonds or State taxes; and and when 6 per cent per annum is figured on the value of the property as laid down by the tax assessors of the State, and the passenger service proportion of the State taxes is taken into consideration they show a loss of from 22 to 81 cents per passenger for every passenger which they have carried in the State for the last seven years. It is a well known and acknowledged fact that when the present two-cent passenger law was enacted during 1907, that it was done during a wave for cheaper passenger fares, until it was stopped by Governor Hughes, of New York, vetoing a bill of like character which was presented to him for signature, because no opportunity had been given to the railroads to show that they could handle passengers without a loss on such a rate. The advocates of the two cents per mile passenger law passed in 1907 claimed that by a reduction to two cents per mile the number of passengers carried would increase so greatly that the additional earnings would more than offset the reduction in the passenger fares. The law which was enacted at that time reduced the passenger fares from three cents, and four cents in some cases, to a flat two cents per mile rate, or a reduction of not less than 33 1-3 per cent.

The Michigan Railroad Commission reports for the seven years January 1, 1908, to December 31, 1914, show that in no year was there an increase over previous years in the number of passengers carried under this lower passenger rate than 9.3 per cent, which was the case in 1908. The increase in the number of passengers carried each year since that time over the previous year has gradually decreased until the number carried in 1914 shows an increase of only four-tenths per cent (0.4%) over the number carried in the year 1913, and for the seven years the increase, one year over the other, has averaged only three and three-tenths per cent (3.3%).

The Interstate Commerce Commission has granted authority for the railroads in all of the states to increase their passenger fares to 2½ cents per mile for all journeys from one state to another, or in so-called interstate traffic. This was done after a very exhaustive investigation made by them which showed that the railroads could not carry passengers except at a loss for 2 cents per mile.

If it is fair for the railroads to charge 2½ cents for an interstate journey, as authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is not right nor fair to charge less than that for a journey wholly within the State of Michigan, or for an intrastate journey.

The railroads have submitted statements at their hearing on this Increase Passenger Rate bill showing that practically every kind of material which they must purchase for the maintenance and operation of their railroads has increased from five (5%) per cent to one hundred (100%) per cent, and that the increase in the cost of labor employed by them has been from twenty-five (25%) per cent to forty (40%) per cent in the last few years. They also submitted statements showing that the railroads in Michigan had been carefully and economically managed, and that only for the high state of efficiency in their work have they been able to live. They also showed that from the year 1908 to 1914 their average freight rates had been reduced 26.9 per cent, and their average passenger rates had been reduced 24 per cent, and that the average freight rates in Michigan territory are lower than in any other locality in the United States or the world. In this connection it has been pointed out that the railroads have just two sources of revenue—freight and passenger rates. What one does not pay the other must.

The passenger traffic on the railroads depends entirely upon the number of people that live in the country served by the railroads, and the figures which they submitted showed that the population in Michigan, where the two-cent rate is in effect, was only 48 people per square mile, while in Alabama, where the population is 41 people per square mile, they have a 2½-cent rate; in New Hampshire, where the population is 47 people per square mile, they have a 2½ to 4-cent rate; in North Carolina, where the population is 45 people per square mile, they have a 2½ to 3-cent rate, and in Virginia, where the population is 51 people per square mile, they have a 2½-cent rate. In Kentucky, where they have a population of 57 people per square mile, they have a 3-cent rate; in New York, where they have a population of 191 people per square mile, they have a 2 to 3-cent rate. In Pennsylvania, where the population is 170 people per square mile, the principal rate is 2½ cents. In Massachusetts, where they have a population of 418 people per square mile the rates are as high as 3 cents.

The railroads of Michigan paid into the State Treasury in state taxes for the year 1913 the sum of $4,618,305.08. The increase in their passenger rate which they are asking for will no more than pay their state taxes, which some have not paid and others are struggling to pay under heavy penalty.

The people of Michigan should know that the railroad business represents the largest single business conducted in the state, and that no further extensions, or improvements, or betterments to their property can or will be made until they are permitted to charge enough for their transportation to return to them their operating expenses and taxes and a fair interest on the value of the railroad. They are not asking to be permitted to earn interest on their security values, although they are entitled to do this.

It is claimed that the railroad situation in the State of Michigan is in an alarming condition, and unless the legislature comes to their relief and grants them a legal right to increase their passenger fares as requested, it is very likely that many more of them will go into the hands of receivers, and that they will be forced to make reductions which will throw thousands of men out of work and may reduce the service which they are now rendering.

They ask you to give this matter your most earnest and careful consideration, and in the interests of your railroads and the welfare of the great State of Michigan let your legislator know he has the support of his community and constituents in voting for the increase in the passenger rates.

D. D. D. In Hospitals; Standard Skin Cure

How many hospital patients, suffering the frightful itch, the raw scorching pain of skin disease, have been soothed to sleep by a soothing fluid washed in by the nurse's hands?

That fluid is the famous D. D. D. prescription for eczema.

THE SUPERVISING NURSE of one of our prominent Catholic institutions (name of nurse and institute on application), writes regarding a patient: "The disease had eaten her eyebrows away. Her nose and lips had become disfigured. Since the use of D. D. D. her eyebrows are growing, her nose and face have assumed their natural expression."

How many eczema sufferers are paying their doctors for regular treatment and are being treated with this same soothing, healing fluid!

DR. GEO. T. RICHARDSON frankly writes "D. D. D. is [illegible] anything I have ever found, safe and soothing, yet a powerful agent."

To do the work, D. D. D. Prescription must be applied according to directions given on the pamphlet around every bottle. Follow these directions—and see!

And it certainly takes away the itch at once—the moment the liquid is applied. The skin is soothed—calmed—so thoroughly refreshed—delightfully cooled.

All druggists of standing have the famous specific as well as the efficient D. D. D. Skin Soap.

But we are so confident of the merits of this prescription that we will refund the purchase price of the first full size bottle if it fails to reach your case. You alone are to judge.

ANNUAL STOCKHOLDER'S MEETING

Of the Tecumseh Co-Operative Association

The first annual meeting of the Tecumseh Co-operative Association was held Friday, Feb. 26, in Co-operative Hall at Tecumseh. The meeting was called to order by the president Dr. Chas. A. Waldron who gave a few preliminary remarks calling attention to the success the company has had since the taking over of Slayton & Son's business on February 8th and, with a widely distributed membership of about 180 of the most progressive and substantial farmers, its future success is assured.

The principal speakers were Henry Hardinge and Preston Bradley of Chicago. Their remarks were listened to with marked attention by those present. The following are a few of the most important extracts:

"Trade and co-operation are synonymous terms.

"We cannot operate a civilized state without trade.

"Specialized industry is absolutely dependent upon trade.

"The only man who does not co-operate is a savage and he turns his face towards civilization when the instant that one cuts bait, the other fishes and the third makes moccasins.

"Trade is the great civilizer.

"Education and trade are the foundations of civilization.

"People cannot co-operate without trading, and that society will be the nearest perfect that co-operates to the fullest extent.

"The city dweller pays $1.00 for every 40 cents that the farmer gets for his products.

"A large part of the 60 per cent which is now spent goes now, not to do useful work, but to support useless parasites.

"The purchasing power of the farmer is limited to the fraction of a dollar which he now gets. Forty per cent, purchasing power limits him to less than half of his prosperity and industrial efficiency, and the whole problem consists in increasing his purchasing power, eliminating waste and enlarging the amount of wealth he gets for his labor. This can be best accomplished by co-operation rather than by any other method.

"The spirit of the bee-hive is the real method of our future civilization. This will eliminate the beggar and the parasite and retain only workers and dependents.

"Efficiency is the watchword of our future social state and efficiency cannot be attained until the beggar and the parasite are entirely eliminated just as it is in the hive once a year.

"Co-operation spells friendship, peace, good-will, wealth, leisure, education and all the things that constitute a balanced civilization."

After the speaking the minutes of the various directors' meetings were read by Secretary John E. Murphy and approved by the stockholders.

The temporary board of directors, consisting of President Chas. A. Waldron, Vice President Fred Ives, Treasurer Thomas Murphy, Secretary John E. Murphy, C. H. Bramble, H. B. Eaton and Charles Evans, were unanimously re-elected for the coming year.

The secretary's report showed that the company had bought and paid for the entire stock and equipment of Slayton & Son, that they had taken over all the real estate and were now operating the same. This company is financed to buy its merchandise on a large scale, discounts its bills and has a market at once for all its lines.

Co-operative Hall is one of the largest in town and was taxed to its capacity with a large and enthusiastic crowd of those interested. The meeting was adjourned until Tuesday, March 2nd, at 1:30 p m to act on unfinished business.

The company are taking in new members every day and it is only a question of a very short time until the capital issue will be sold.

Members were here from Tipton, Clinton, Macon, Britton, Ridgeway and Holloway. The American Co-operative Organization Bureau of Chicago was represented by W. F. Vedder and a committee of stockholders of the new co-operative company now being organized at Addison under this same plan were also here.

Be Sure You Get This Old Reliable Cough Medicine

Imitations always follow the trail of success. Hundreds of imitations have come and gone since FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR COMPOUND began, 40 years ago, to loosen the grip of coughs and colds.

Be sure you get the genuine

Foley's Honey and Tar Compound

And avoid the ones that sound like it.

Here are three easy ways to tell the genuine. 1st—The name of "Foley's." 2nd—The Yellow package. 3rd—The Beehive on the yellow package. You cannot get a substitute to do for you what FOLEY'S HONEY AND TAR COMPOUND will do—for coughs, colds, croup, bronchial and lagrippe coughs, throat and lung trouble. Buy it of your druggist and be safe.

By C. D. BEEBE, Mgr.

To My Friends.

Beside nominations for important state offices, the major political parties will nominate their candidates for the important office of Circuit Judge of this county at the primary election, March 3rd, 1915, next Wednesday.

The Republican candidates for the nomination are:

BURTON L. HART,
JACOB N. SAMPSON and WALLACE WESTERMAN,

and of the Democratic party are

BERT D. CHANDLER and FREDERICK B. WOOD.

The Progressive party has no candidate.

You certainly have a choice among these aspirants. Don't let those who do attend the primary nominate the one you do not want just because you failed to vote.

The nomination is made by the people who vote. Select the man you want, as you may choose, but be sure to be there and vote.

FREDERICK B. WOOD.

CATHERINE OUSTERHOUT.

Catherine Beach was born in the town of Harmon, St Lawrence Co, N. Y. April 8, 1837 and passed away Feb. 16, 1915 at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Joseph Coon.

She was married Dec. 15, 1857 to John B Ousterhout who passed away June 20, 1904. He enlisted in the Civil war August 12, 1862 and served during the war, leaving her to endure the hardships of a war widow with two girls nearly babies.

All her married life had been spent in and around Ridgeway. She was mother of the following: Lilly who passed away March 18, 1912. Fidelia, Samuel J. and Gertie adopted at infancy with whom all her life has been spent, thirteen grandchildren and 7 great grandchildren.

She was the daughter of William and Lodina Beach and the oldest of a family of 6 children four girls and two boys only one Mrs. John Segar of Jackson is left to mourn.

She was converted in a little school house near Britton (then a wilderness) in her early life and later joined the M. E church of Ridgeway where she had always remained faithful until disease would not permit her to attend.

She had been a patient sufferer tho her pain was intense and often said she was only waiting for the master to come with her darling little Orrin for whom she so deeply mourned and beckon her spirit home.

Her children Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Coon with whom she lived have cared for her with all that loving hands could do for a mother as many times has been heard from her own lips. May God's Blessings rest upon them who will deeply miss her in the home.

During her last illness her favorite hymn was that beginning with;

The morning bright with rosy light
Has waked us from our sleep,
Father, we own thy love alone;
Thy little ones doth keep.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank all who assisted us during the last illness and death of our dear mother and sister for the music rendered and the beautiful flowers and especially Elder Somers for his comforting words.

An Evening with Verdi

RECITAL BY MONDAY CLUB

Given Last Evening at Baptist Church

The ladies of the Monday Club gave to the people of Tecumseh a rare treat last night at the Baptist church in their "Evening with Verdi and other Italian Composers." Those appearing on the program were all local talent of whom Tecumseh may be justly proud. The church was filled to its seating capacity showing that the people of Tecumseh appreciate the efforts of the ladies of the club to make this occasion a pleasant one.

Mrs. R. A. Heesen, as chairman of the committee, deserves much credit for her work. The decorations of potted plants and baskets of flowers made an effective background for the artists. The ushers were ladies of the committee and were very attractive in their evening gowns. All the expenses of this entertainment were borne by the club and we have heard many say that they have paid a dollar for a professional concert which was no better than this.

Mrs Fred Dickinson was leader of the evening and prefaced each number with a brief outline of the opera from which it was taken. The whole program as published in our last issue was given with the exception of the solo by Mrs Watts of Adrian who was detained at home by illness.

The sketch of Verdi by Mrs. C. A. Wright was most interesting. She traced his career from his childhood, his passionate love of music, his struggle with poverty, the friends who helped him in his musical career, his loss of wife and children, his despondency and finally his wonderful success that made the last years of his life his best.

Each number on the program was heartily encored and several responded in a most delightful manner. Following the tenor solo of W. S Dickinson from "Il Trovatore" Mesdames Wood and Hodges gave an instrumental duet from the same opera Each number deserves special mention but space forbids. We can only say in closing that the entertainment was most charming and the ladies of the Monday Club deserve a vote of thanks for giving it to the public.

TRENDーー

The real trend in automobile manufacture is toward lighter weight and lower price, which typifies the most modern design and the highest factor of safety at moderate cost.

Houses are no longer bulky in construction, watches are thinner, bicycles weigh less. Each is more adaptable to the use intended, giving maximum value at minimum weight.

The trend is toward lighter construction, and in the science of manufacture things are produced better at a lower cost.

That is why the sales of Mitchell cars have, during the last three months, exceeded by more than 80% the sales of any previous three months in Mitchell history.

POLICE NIP PLOT TO KILL RICH MEN

Blowing Up of St. Patrick's Cathedral First on Program.

ANARCHIST TAKEN IN CHURCH

Assassination of Carnegie, Rockefeller, Vanderbilt and Other Millionaires Said to Have Been Plan of Band of "Reds"—Were to Raid New York City Banks.

NEW YORK — A sensational attempt to wreck St. Patrick's cathedral with a bomb was frustrated by the arrest of a man as he was walking up the north side of the edifice with two bombs and a lighted cigar in his hands.

The bomb carrier gave his name as Frank Abarno. The police charge that he was party to the attempt made last year to wreck the cathedral in a similar maner.

Another "Red" Arrested.

On the charge of making bombs the police also arrested a man who said he was Charles Carbone. Both Abarno and Carbone, the police assert, are members of a band of anarchists.

Their arrest was accomplished after months of work by a detective who was admitted to membership in the band.

Plot to Kill Wealthy Men.

The police assert that by the arrest of the men and the detection of the band of anarchists they nipped in the bud a widespread plot to assassinate with bombs Andrew Carnegie, John D Rockefeller, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Cornelius Vanderbilt and other wealthy men.

When the reign of terror was well under way, according to the police, the anarchists were to begin raids on New York city banks. Armed with rifles and shotguns, the police assert, the anarchists were to appear all over the city, shooting and robbing.

Rev. Devona and his congregation conducted services in the church as usual, and Mr. Winter, after communicating with Bishop Williams by long distance phone, returned to Detroit. BIG SHIP COMPANY IS INDICTED BY U. S. JURY

Hamburg-American Accused of Conspiracy to Defraud.

NEW YORK — Two indictments were brought in by the federal grand jury against the Hamburg-American Steamship company and Karl Buenz, its general representative and chairman of its directors in this country. George Koetter, the company's general superintendent; Adolf Hachmeister, Felix Seffner and "Walter" Poppenhouse or J. Pappinghaus, are also named in the two indictments which charge conspiracy to defraud the United States under section thirty-seven of the United States criminal code.

One indictment is for conspiracy to defraud this government by "causing collectors of the United States customs by means of false statements to make, record and transmit untrue and inaccurate records." The other charges such conspiracy "in and by obtaining clearance papers by means of false manifests."

The indictments charge the company, Mr. Buenz and the others with conspiring to defraud this country from Aug. 1, 1914, to Feb. 26, less than a week ago," wilfully, corruptly and feloniously."

HAND TELLS BURIAL PLACE

Finds Her Missing Husband After Snow Bank Thaws.

MUNISING, MICH. — A frozen hand with a mitten attached extending above the snow was discovered by Mrs. George Vicovitch. Below the hand lay the body of her husband, who was missing several days.

On Feb. 6 Vicovitch got off a train at Rumely, after spending the day at Marquette. With his arms full of parcels he started to walk home in the valley, four miles away. It was the wildest night of the winter, a sixty mile blizzard blowing. His wife and daughter, ten years old, sat up all night waiting for him, and the next morning a searching party was organized. The thaw uncovered the hand, which was seen by Mrs. Vicovitch. The thin clothing of the man was responsible for his death. Vicovitch was twenty-eight years old.

ALLIES CLOSE UP SEA TO TEUTONS

Notice Is Served on World of Complete Blockade.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY ASQUITH

Shipments of All Kinds to Be Barred From Germany—New War Reprisal Is Defended as Retaliation for Undersea Campaign of Piracy and Pillage.

LONDON — Great Britain has decreed in behalf of herself and her allies the complete prohibition of shipments of food to Germany and of all other trade of whatever nature with Germany or her ally, Austria.

The decision to bar the oceans to all commerce with the Teutonic allies was made public in the house of commons by Herbert Henry Asquith, the prime minister, who, after an arraignment of Germany's war zone warfare as "piracy and pillage" declared:

"There is no form of economic pressure whereto we do not consider ourselves entitled to resort."

Won't Assassinate Neutrals.

"We do not propose to assassinate neutral seamen or destroy neutral ships," the prime minister continued. "If neutrals suffer inconvenience the allies will regret it, but neutrals should remember that this phase of the war was not initiated by us."

Mr. Asquith declared to be untrue the statements emanating from Germany that Great Britain had rejected the American suggestions looking to a modification of the present methods of marine warfare. These proposals, he added, are now being considered by the allies.

"No judicial niceties" will be permitted to strangle the measures of reprisal to be enforced by the allies, the prime minister declared. He said that the prohibition of trade with Germany was to be absolute even vessels bound to or from neutral ports being subject to seizure if they carry shipments bound to or from Germany.

Allies Have Troops in Turkey.

Mr. Asquith also disclosed in this epoch making address the fact that the allies have sent an expeditionary army to Turkey to co-operate with the combined fleets in their campaign to capture Constantinople. This had been done, he added, without weakening the battle line in France or Belgium. The joint action in this respect, he said, served to illustrate the close accord among all the allies.

The great fleet now battering at the forts in the Dardanelles had been formed, said the prime minister, without drawing vessels from the grand fleet, which is protecting the shores of Great Britain and France.

Silence Two More Turk Forts.

PARIS — Bombardment of the inner forts of the Dardanelles has been resumed says an Athens dispatch to the Havas Agency.

Fire from the guns of the allied fleet has destroyed the batteries of Kilid Bahr and Fort Sultanie (Chanak Kalesi), which guard the entrance to the narrowest part of the straits.

Information from Titylene and Tenedos is to the effect that over 100,000 Turks have been posted along the coast of the Gallipoli peninsula near the Sea of Marmora, about 130 miles from Constantinople.

Say German Army Is Cut In Two.

LONDON — "A Russian cavalry movement cut the German East Prussian army in two last Friday at Krasnosielo," says the Daily News' Petrograd correspondent.

"The Germans are now divided into two parts, with a considerable gap between them."

Light refreshments were served later.

LETTER FROM OUR OLD FRIEND, MRS. WISNER

Augusta, Mich., March 2, 1915.

EDITOR HERALD:

No news from Franklin this week—your scribe is not there.

Leaving Tipton at 4:16 p. m. February 23rd, I arrived at Battle Creek at 7:15 p. m. It is dark, cold and stormy. There are few people abroad. The old depot looks cold and unfamiliar. I now realize what a joyful thing it is not to notify your friends of the time and place of your arrival. I have their address but have no idea where to find them.

"You want a cab?"

"No, I want a car line and a policeman."

"What do you want of a policeman?"

"To direct me."

"Where do you want to go?"

"To B—— Street," giving him an address.

"Oh, that's two miles out and you have to walk a mile after leaving the car and go through a wood yard."

"Well, how do I find G—— Street?" giving him another address.

"Oh, that's not quite so far out, but you walk four blocks after leaving the car line and up a very steep hill."

Leaving my cabby I inquire of another individual who doesn't look like a cabby but may be (I am told that the policemen are all down town) with a similar result.

Choosing the last address as the lesser evil, I hurry to the car line, but I am suddenly seized with the determination to go to the first address. That's where I want to go and I am going there if I have to go through seven wood yards.

I board the car. Alas, the conductor doesn't seem to know about my address. Presently he is conversing with a boy, a freckled face, every day sort of a boy.

"Here's where you get off," says the conductor.

It is a dimly lighted place. The conductor begins to give me directions.

"I'm going with her and will show her the way," says the boy. Bless the boys! They are the salt of the earth.

Verily there is a Providence that takes care of babes and fools. Soon I am in the warmth and welcome of dear friends' home, darkness and storm forgotten. And it hasn't been over half an hour since I left Mr. Cabby. Moral: If you want to do a thing, do it regardless of the other fellow.

February 24. I leave Battle Creek on the interurban, pass through Urbandale and reach Augusta in about 20 minutes.

Augusta is a town of about 600 inhabitants, situated on the Kalamazoo river and L. S. R. R. It is about ten miles west of "The Creek." There are three churches—one of them without a congregation. A fine large high school is beautifully located in a little grove on a hill side. From the top of this hill is a beautiful view of the valley and hills of the Kalamazoo.

When I enter the little house here in Augusta I leave behind me the busy, pushing, frivolous twentieth century and go back to the middle of the nineteenth. Talk about the good old times! Yes—but— I guess the twentieth century is a pretty good century to live in. "REPORTER."

STARR COMMONWEALTH HOME

Keeping the boys busy and giving them love is the keynote of the success of the Starr Commonwealth Home, near Albion.

In that Home, where are gathered 18 of the worst "so called" bad boys of Michigan, there is absolute harmony and there are no bad habits or displays of vice. The miracle is worked by love.

A year ago last August the Home was founded on the principle that there are no really bad boys in the world. The home is the result of the untiring efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Starr, both graduates of Albion College. It is Mr. Starr's dream come true.

In the 20 months of the Home's history, Mr. Starr has never struck a boy. These boys were youngsters whose names were on the police books of Detroit, Grand Rapids, Kalamazoo, and other cities. They were considered incorrigible. Now they are obedient, loving, Christian lads boys with ambitions, lads who are planning to go to College when they finish at the Home. There is a school in connection with the home, taught by a dear little teacher, who gives her services for a mere pittance.

The boys do all the house work, the chores, most of the gardening, and take care of the cows and chickens.

Money is being raised for the Home in this city by Mrs. I. M. Curl, Field Sec., of the Home. She loves the lads as though they belong to her. She spends hours traveling about the state interesting people in the Home.

Mr. Starr has given his all, he has nothing more to give, except himself. He is doing that day in and day out, with a love and devotion which inspire men and women, who visit the Home, with a sort of reverance.

ELECTRIC SERVICE

The Tecumseh Electric Company are constructing a six mile line out of Ridgeway, four miles north-east on the Ridge road then two miles west past the Grange Hall, turning at the Len Miller farm.

The question of electric service for every farmer is only a question of time. This line leading out of Tecumseh is already supplying a large number of farmers and many more are becoming interested. It is no longer "electric light" but "electric service," or as some one has aptly called it, the "electric servant."

TRIED 7 YEARS

Sometimes, as most Michigan horse-owners know, a simple liniment may cure an external ill, whereas an expensive treatment may fail. For instance, James Miller of Pottstown, Pa., cured a horse of poll-evil with three bottles of Hanford's Balsam of Myrrh. He says: "The veterinarians had been trying to cure the horse for seven years." adv

JUST STOP AND THINK FOR A MINUTE

The automobile is now an important factor in our daily lives; no longer a luxury, but a means by which we come nearer to our goal of efficiency.

To own an automobile once is to feel that never again can you get along without one, the modern business man, therefore, purchases an automobile as he buys any other article on the market.

The car that will give the best return on the money invested is the car of his choice.

We have sold 5 Ford cars this week and 8 of them were men who have never owned a machine before, would it not be a good idea to drive a Ford car this year and should you decide to buy something better around a $1000 next season, you have learned how to take care of it anyway, that is worth something, your investment has been small and your depreciation much less.

Do not wait for Summer air and sunshine, our roads are good and we positively cannot promise you deliveries later.

Dumplings

For Soups, Stews and Fricasseed Chicken

Left overs of roast lamb, veal or beef, the cheaper cuts of fresh meats, and fowls too old for roasting, make delicious and nourishing stews. K C Dumplings make them doubly attractive and the whole dish is most economical—an object to most families while meats are so high and must be made to go as far as possible.

K C Dumplings

By Mrs. Nevada Briggs, the well known baking expert.

2 cups flour; 3 level teaspoonfuls K C Baking Powder; ½ teaspoonful salt; 2 cup shortening; milk or cream.

Sift together three times, the flour, baking powder and salt; into this work the shortening and use cream or milk to make a dough less stiff than for biscuits.

Allow the stew to boil down so that the liquid does not cover the meat or chicken. Add half a cup of cold water to stop its boiling and drop the dough in large spoonfuls on top of the meat or chicken. Cover and let boil again for 15 minutes.

Made with K C Baking Powder and steamed in this way, dumplings are as light as biscuits and are delicious with thickened gravy.

This recipe is adapted from one for Chicken Pot Pie in "The Cook's Book" by Janet McKenzie Hill, editor of the Boston Cooking School Magazine. The book contains 90 excellent recipes for things that are good to eat and that help reduce the cost of living. AGAIN FARMER MOORE WINS

In the Shay and Moore wrestling match last evening at Witherell hall, Shay won the first fall in 31½ minutes with severe tactics. Moore won the second in 9½ minutes. Shay was cautioned several times for trying to grab Moore on the return for the 3rd fall.

Both men were determined and neither left an opening. Shay, though coached by his manager, was very rough and fowled Moore several times Referee Hopper dragged them apart, stopped the wrestle and awarded the match to Moore, which was good judgment as it was leading to worse.

The preliminaries were good. The Jeable Bros. of Holgate, Ohio, aged 11 and 13, gave an exhibition of wrestling and boxing that took the house down These boys are professionals and they are considered the best in the world.

There were about 150 in attendance.

HOOKING A SHARK.

It's an Exciting Sport Even if One Doesn't See the Fish.

Fishing for sharks off the pier at Palm Beach is a Brobdingnagian sport. You fish with clotheslines and a hook the size of a split anchor. Half of some great fish is slipped on your hook for bait. You throw it off the pier and fasten the end of the line to the railing and then take out your detective story and read.

Sometimes you get a bite; sometimes you don't. At evening the colored gentleman in charge of the shark fishing on the pier goes around and takes in the lines. That in itself is on rare occasions an exciting sport.

Once a New York vacationist was standing on the pier enjoying the sunset after a day's fruitless angling when he heard a shout from the colored gentleman, who had discovered a shark on one of the lines that had been left out. The colored gentleman was having trouble in handling the beast, so the New Yorker went to his assistance. Together they pulled and hauled at the line in vain. Another man on the pier joined in, and then the three braced their feet against the rail and tugged for all they were worth. But in spite of all they could do the line slipped gradually through their fingers.

Finally all the slack was used up, and the rope, coming taut against the rail, snapped like a thread. The New Yorker has always wished he could have had just one look at that shark.—New York Post.

"I noticed one of your ads in the paper, and then and there decided to try Peruna. I am pleased to say that it came up to all my expectations, for in six weeks it had driven the catarrh out of my system and I have not been troubled since."

Mrs. A. J. Tieman, 1122 Wyoming St., San Antonio, Texas, writes: "I suffered over nine years with catarrh of the head, nose and ears. Five bottles of Peruna have restored me my health."

Antiquity of "A Regular Shindy."

The antiquity of many familiar terms is surprising when it is known. Many people are not aware that "What the dickens!" occurs in Shakespeare, but fewer still will be prepared to hear that the phrase "a regular shindy" is found in an author's note to a poem called "The Popish Kingdom," published in 1570. A writer quotes this note, which refers to the celebration of Maundy Thursday, "Midnight services are held in church, the lights are put out, and a regular shindy follows, men being beaten and wounded."—London Globe.

TAX COLLECTOR 74 YEARS OLD

Expected to Resign on Account of Feebleness — Gained Strength and Twenty-four Pounds by Taking Vinol.

Corinth, Miss.: — "I am a city tax collector and seventy-four years of age. I was in a weak, run-down condition so that I became exhausted by every little exertion. My druggist told me about Vinol, and I decided to take it. In a week I noticed considerable improvement; I continued its use and now I have gained twenty pounds in weight, and feel much stronger. I consider Vinol a fine tonic to create strength for old people."—J. A. PRICE, Corinth, Miss.

As one grows old their organs act more slowly and less effectually than in youth, circulation is poor, the blood gets thin, the appetite poor and digestion weak. Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, is the ideal strengthener and body builder for old folks because it creates a good healthy appetite, strengthens digestion, enriches the blood, improves circulation and in this natural manner builds up, strengthens and invigorates feeble, run-down, nervous and aged people, and if it does not do all we say, we will pay back your money.

LLOYD-GEORGE FLAYS BOOZE

Chancellor Says It Is Worse Foe to Britain Than Submarines.

LONDON. — At Bangor Chancellor Lloyd-George in a public speech said there were workmen in the armament works who refused to work a full week, and added that this is due mostly to strong drink, "which is doing more damage than all the German submarines put together." He said the government meant to use all its powers to deal radically with the question.

"We need arms more than men," he said, "and every day's delay is full of peril to this country." It was plain that he was referring to the offending armorers when he said "it is intolerable that the lives of Britons should be imperiled for the sake of a few farthing an hour men."

WELCOMES SEIZURE OF DACIA

Britain Glad to Have France Share Responsibility of Taking Neutral Ships.

LONDON. — The capture of the American steamer Dacia, formerly sailing under the German flag, by the French is welcomed here, as it will enable a French prize court to decide her case, while an English court will deal with the cargo of the American steamer Wilhelmina. Thus the responsibility for stopping goods in neutral bottoms bound for Germany will be borne equally by the two allies.

Conditions Serious in Singapore.

MANILA. — Conditions still are serious at Sinapore as the result of the mutiny among Indian troops, if reports brought here are well founded. According to these stories, executions are taking place every day in the public squares of Singapore. Hundreds of mutineers [illegible] still at large, and it is considered possible an entire régiment is involved.

HOLD GREEKS FOR OUTRAGE

Bulgarian Officials Accuse Them of Complicity in Sofia Killings.

PARIS. — The Havas agency has given out a dispatch from its Athens correspondent, who says that information has reached there from Sofia to the effect that the police of the Bulgarian capital have arrested a number of Greek notables, charged with complicity in the explosion of a bomb the night of Jan. 15 in the local Casino during a ball attended by the exclusive society of the city.

This act resulted in the killing of two persons.

MARTEL AND POITIERS.

The Man and Battle That Saved Europe From the Saracen Yoke.

A traveler approaching the city of Poitiers, France, would hardly believe that it was around the site of that small city that the battle which saved all Europe from the Saracen yoke was fought. The man who commanded the French in that great battle was Charles, who afterward received the surname Martel, "the hammer," from his mighty prowess in that fight.

He baffled the Saracen invasion by his great victory at Poitiers. The Saracens had mastered all Asia and conquered Spain. Nothing could withstand their arms, and the Crescent bore death and desolation before it wherever it went. The Mohammedans determined to conquer all Europe in the name of the Prophet. Spain had fallen, and France was next. The two armies met at Poitiers. The strife was bloody, for the Saracens had the prestige of former victories and the advantage of numbers; France had the wisdom of Martel. That wisdom triumphed, and the Mohammedan was hurled back, a broken power. This victory saved Europe from want and desolation, for the brave people would have suffered anything sooner than embrace Mohammedanism. The great champion of Christian civilization lived nine years after his famous triumph at Poitiers and died in the year 741.—Irish World.

Force of Drops of Water.

It seems almost incredible that so small a thing as a drop of rain should injure the propeller of an aeroplane, but such is the case. At so great a speed does the propeller revolve—1,200 revolutions a minute as a matter of fact—that a rain drop hits it with such enormous force as to chip a piece of the wood away. Some idea of the hardships entailed by flying through the rain at sixty miles an hour may be gathered from the fact that an aviator who recently went through such an experience, alighted with the edge of his propeller fretted as though it had been gnawed by rats. The rain drops had chipped pieces out of the blades and also bruised the aviator's face, owing to the force with which they hit against his flesh.—London Spectator.

Of the Past.

Geologists say that several species of man have entirely disappeared from the earth. Doubtless these last species include the nice old gentleman who used to pull off his boots of an evening with the help of the bootjack.—Chicago News.

The expression "fourth estate" was first used by Thomas Carlyle and was applied to the editors during the period of the French revolution.

FRANCIS JOSEPH

Physical Condition of Aged Austrian Emperor Is Serious.

VIENNA. — Via Rome.) — The physical condition of Emperor Francis Joseph has become most serious. He is so weak that he sits most of the time as if he were in a coma. WORLD'S CHAMP JINX VICTIM IN MICHIGAN

He Has Few Bones That Have Not Been Broken.

CLIO, MICH. — William A. Scott, fifty-nine years of age, a farmer, has been a source of experiments for physicians during the last ten years, as he has had nearly every bone in his body broken during that period. His friends and relatives believe him to be a victim to a jinx. His accidents always occur when he is driving a team.

Scott has outlived the physician who attended his first accident, who was a man younger than himself by several years. Among some of the bones that have been fractured are his skull—this nearly proved fatal, the bones in his left leg, his right knee crushed, several ribs broken, his collar bone broken besides a large number of severe wounds about his entire body. At present he is suffering from a serious fracture to his left shoulder and which will require the surgeons' latest appliances to set the bones.

Scott's accidents have always been of a peculiar nature, as he always strikes on his head, rendering him unconscious so that he is unable to explain how the accident occurred. Although his accidents have always been serious, the physicians have never given up hopes of his recovery because he has such a strong constitution.

BRITAIN VOTES $1,435,000,000

Asquith's Reference to Increase Indicates Kitchener's Army Is Moving.

LONDON. — The house of commons unanimously voted appropriations for war expenditures amounting to $1,435,000,000, making the total vote for war expenses to date $3,235,000,000. The premier first asked for an appropriation of $185,000,000 for the remainder of the period up to March 31. This was adopted without a dissenting vote.

The premier's reference to an increase in expenses after March 31 is taken to mean that Kitchener's new armies will be in France by that time. Recent reports state that the British now have approximately 1,000,000 men in France and that transports are carrying men across the channel daily.

RAMS A GERMAN SUBMARINE

Captain of Steamer Thordis Reports Destruction of "Undersea" Boat.

LONDON. — The destruction of a German submarine when it was rammed by the steamer Thordis off Beachy Head is reported by the captain of the steamer which has just arrived at Weymouth.

"We sighted the submarine when it was forty yards away," the captain declared. "It fired a torpedo which missed us by a few feet. Then we put the helm hard to starboard and rammed the periscope. There was a crash and we saw nothing more of the submarine."

TREND—

The real trend in automobile manufacture is toward lighter weight and lower price, which typifies the most modern design and the highest factor of safety at moderate cost.

Houses are no longer bulky in construction, watches are thinner, bicycles weigh less. Each is more adaptable to the use intended, giving maximum value at minimum weight.

The trend is toward lighter construction, and in the science of manufacture things are produced better at a lower cost.

That is why the sales of Mitchell cars have, during the last three months, exceeded by more than 80% the sales of any previous three months in Mitchell history.

MICHIGAN TROUBLES WILL NOT BE AIRED

No Report Is to Be Made on Copper Strike.

Washington, March 8.—No report on its investigation of the Michigan copper strike will be made by the house committee, which made an exhaustive inquiry during the spring and summer of last year.

Representative Taylor of Colorado, chairman of the committee, said that a discussion of strike conditions now would only cause recrimination and disturb conditions.

Agents of the department of labor made a report which was published several months ago.

MAY 10 IS SET FOR PAN-AMERICAN MEET

Secretary McAdoo Challenges Ship Purchase Foes.

Washington, March 8.—President Wilson fixed May 10 as the date for the Pan-American financial conference for which an appropriation was made at the last session of congress. The conference will be held at Washington and is designed to furnish an opportunity for a full interchange of ideas between American bankers and officials and financial and diplomatic representatives of South and Central American republics with regard to the promotion of better trade relations between the United States and these countries.

Secretary McAdoo issued a statement saying that the president will extend invitations to the governments of all the countries in this hemisphere to send representatives. In this statement the secretary calls upon the interests responsible for the defeat of the ship purchase bill to accept responsibility and provide adequate transportation facilities for the South American and Latin American trade.

SENSATION IN THAW'S CASE

Rumor That High Up Officials Are Involved in His Escape.

New York, March 8.—Hints of a sensation, as yet unrevealed, are in circulation as likely to be sprung at the trial of Harry K. Thaw, when the slayer of Stanford White, with five others, who went to trial today on the charge of conspiracy, growing out of his sensational escape from the state hospital for the criminal insane at Mattewan in August, 1913.

It is inntimated that the testimony deals with the efforts of an official occupying a high position in connection with obtaining Thaw's liberty, and it is hinted that further developments may be sought. This official is known to have been in the good graces of Thaw to such an extent that he often handled Thaw's money and the state, it is stated, will endeavor to show that he was a moving spirit in the arrangements that led up to the final getaway in an automobile.

SHIPS OF ALLIES GAIN IN STRAITS

Indirect Fire Is New Method of Naval Attack.

AEROPLANES FIND THE RANGE

French Statement Says Anglo-French Ships Are Still Bombarding Works at Dardanos and Souan Dire—Exodus From Constantinople Continues Famine Threatens City.

London, March 8.—The bombardment of the inner defenses of the Dardanelles and the defenses on the Gulf of Saros continues, the dreadnaught Queen Elizabeth battering away at the works on the Asiatic side of the strait by the indirect method of attack while a part of the fleet pours in a direct fire from within the passageway. A statement issued by the French ministry of marine at Paris and telegraphed here says:

"The battle ship Queen Elizabeth, stationed in the Gulf of Saros, bombarded by direct fire on March 6 the two large works on the Asiatic side of the strait which defend the narrows near Chanak, namely Forts Hamidieh-Tabia and Hamidieh-Sultan. At the same time battle ships which had penetrated the strait continued by direct fire the bombardment of the works at Dardanos, on the Asiatic side, and Souan Dire, on the European side."

Indirect Fire New Thing.

The employment of indirect fire from ships on land positions is said to be a departure in modern warfare. The forts which the Queen Elizabeth is attacking are completely out of sight of the range finders on the battle ship, whose guns are directed by information gathered from aeroplane observers and from the ships inside the strait which are able to observe the results of the shelling from the Gulf of Saros and to correct errors in marksmanship by the men handling the great fifteen inch guns.

The presence of fourteen inch guns in the fort of Hamidieh-Sultan was a surprise to the Anglo-French fleet, as previously it had been thought that eleven inch cannon were the greatest possessed by the Turks. Thus far the formidable weapons had not been handled effectively, which indicates that the Turkish gunners are not trained to use them properly.

Exodus From Constantinople.

A dispatch from Bucharest says that the attacks on the inner forts have caused the panic in Constantinople to grow. The exodus of the well to do residents of the Turkish capital has begun and a number of families — mostly Greeks — have reached Bucharest.

Fifty German military officers who have been in Turkey passed through Bucharest on their way to Berlin. Other German officers, accompanied by their families, have arrived here and will proceed to Berlin shortly.

Information gleaned from travelers through the Roumanian capital makes the situation in Constantinople appear still more upset. Panic now reigns unchecked, it is said, and the work of erecting defenses at almost every conceivable spot is being pushed with feverish activity, even though the indications are that the capital will not be defended at all but that the Ottoman government will flee as soon as the strait is forced. Guns have been removed from some of the defenses in the Dardanelles and mounted on islands in the Sea of Marmora.

Famine Threatens Capital.

In addition to other troubles the people of Constantinople are now threatened with famine, according to the Bucharest correspondents. Bread has been requisitioned for the troops in such quantities that little is left for civilians. It is freely reported that the Germans have lost their influence in the capital and that most of them have left already for Germany.

IOWA "RENOIZED" BY RULING

Judge Holds Year's Residence Is Not Necessary to Get Divorce.

Des Moines, Ia., March 8.—A ruling was made by Judge Hubert Utterback of the district court, which may convert Des Moines into a "second Reno." Strictly speaking, it may convert any Iowa town in which a district judge sits into the same kind of place.

The court's ruling was made in the divorce case of John Dardis against Jean Dardis. It was claimed that the plaintiff and defendant have been residents of Iowa only eleven months The court held the statute does not state that a year's residence is necessary when the defendant lives in the state at the time the action is commenced, if he is served with personal service, instead of notification by official publication.

Bernhardt Keeps Improving.

Paris, March 8.—Mme. Sarah Bernhardt's condition continues to improve, according to the daily bulletin at Bordeaux.

Lillian May Cook's Death Involves No One in Wrongdoing.

New Haven, Conn., March 8.—Coroner Eli Mix completed his investigation of the suicide of Lillian May Cook. The coroner filed a report today that Miss Cook came to her death by her own hand and that she alone was responsible for her act.

Virginius Mayo, employer of the young woman at the time of her disappearance more than a week ago, was instructed to disregard a subpoena requiring him to appear before the coroner.

HELP OF GREECE IS NOT WANTED IN WAR

Germany Seeks to Keep Her Out; Allies Don't Want Her In.

London, March 8.—The chancellories of Europe have not been so busily engaged in working all the expedients of diplomacy since the opening of the war as they are now. The German foreign office has sent the most urgent representations to Greece in an effort to strengthen the hand of King Constantine, who is opposing the entry of his nation into the war, while France, Russia and Great Britain have taken equally prompt and equally strong measures to prevent the development of any situation that might embarrass the present campaign in the Dardanelles.

It is stated here semi-officially that the allies are not especially desirous that Greece should open hostilities against Turkey, believing that she may demand too high a price as the reward for her intervention. There is also fear that action by Greece might complicate the situation with respect to Bulgaria, whose neutrality is a matter of great importance to the triple entente. Germany is reported to have offered the most solemn guarantees that if Greece remains neutral she will be given concessions which were denied her at the close of the Balkan war.

DIPLOMATS TO QUIT MEXICO

Foreign Representatives Fancy El Paso to Watch and Wait.

El Paso, Tex., March 8.—Private information received here from Vera Cruz and Mexico City say the diplomats at the Mexican capital are seriously considering moving in a body to El Paso, here to observe movements in Mexico.

General Villa invited them some time ago when Carranza insisted on them all moving to Vera Cruz to enter his territory and said they would be located at Chihuahua City and guaranteed protection. He has renewed this offer, but the report says there is an inclination to quit Mexico City and to locate at El Paso, where they will be in close touch with Mexican affairs and can make reports to their governments. They would have to obtain permission from the United States to be located here but such permission, it is understood would be easily obtained.

Friday evening Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Rex received the Presbyterian people at the church to honor those who had united with the church during the last year.

Prof. Zaugg is certainly a revelation on the banjo and also a singer and Rev. Rex "put one over" on his audience for no one dreamed of his ability as a reader although his delivery as a preacher has always been admired. The program was truly delightful and those entertained were greatly pleased.

IN JUSTICE COURT

Fred Manley was before Judge Hosmer Monday to answer to the charge of shooting a female mallard on the farm of Clarence Witherell. The investigation of the case was made by Dept. Game Warden James Laws of Jackson who swore out the warrant which was turned over to Dept. J. B. Smith who made the arrest. Manley pleaded guilty and rather than go to jail paid of $10. and $5.75 cost.

At 4 o'clock Sunday John Sisson telephoned to John Smith that a bunch of skunks had been stolen from his place. Dept Smith followed up several trails but finally located the skunks and Peter Dermire and Stanley Packard. The men were arranged before Judge Hosmer Monday. They plead guilty and were let off by paying a fine of $3.00 rather than to spend ten days in jail.

ATTENTION, GRANGERS!

The next regular meeting of Tecumseh Grange will be held on Friday of this week instead of Saturday because of the Slayton auction sale. There is important business to be transacted and every member of Tecumseh Grange is urged to be present. All day meeting with pot luck dinner at noon.—By order of the Worthy Master. C. H. What Is Dissipation?

I think sometimes that our common definition of dissipation is far too narrow. We confine it to crude excesses in the use of intoxicating liquor or the crude gratification of the passions, but often these are only the outward symbols of a more subtle inward disorder. The things of the world—a thousand clamoring interests, desires, possessions—have got the better of us. Men become drunken with the inordinate desire for owning things and dissolute with ambition for political office. I knew a man once, a farmer, who debauched himself upon land; fed his appetite upon the happiness of his home, cheated his children of education, and himself went shabby, bookless, joyless, comfortless, that he might buy more land. I call that dissipation too.—David Grayson in American Magazine.

The Greatest Geologist.

The royal name in geology is undoubtedly that of Charles Lyell. It was Lyell who did for geology what Copernicus did for the heavens and Darwin for the realm of biology—gave it true rendering by finding out and stating its true laws. Before Lyell's time geology was largely romance, but in "The Principles of Geology," published in 1830, the old catastrophic view of the formation of the earth heard its deathknell, and from the publication of that great work we are to date the birth of real geology.—Exchange.

THE SIX AND SIX PLAN

The plan of reorganizing our schools into two periods of six years each is strongly recommended by both the State Department of Education and the University of Michigan.

This plan leaves the first six grades as they now are, the last six grades being organized on the departmental basis.

In many ways this is a desirable innovation. Observation teaches us that many children undergo various physical and mental changes at about the time they finish the sixth grade. Truancy and other irregularities are prevalent at that time. The child is prone to loose interest in school and needs change in methods and course of study to satisfy the changes in his nature. For this reason it is more logical to begin the high school with the seventh than with the ninth grade as we now have it.

This plan gives the boys and girls an earlier opportunity to select subjects in which they are thereby kept in school. Under present conditions they leave school as soon as the law will permit them to do so. Over 50 per cent. of the boys and girls of high school age in Tecumseh at the present time are not in school.

Are we going to permit these conditions to exist or shall we give the boys and girls an opportunity to study subjects in which they are interested?

VILLAGE ELECTION

There was practically no interest in Monday's village election, probably due to the fact that there was only one ticket in the field, the "Citizen's Ticket," people being so generally satisfied with the ticket nominated that they did not think it necassary to go to the poles.

The total number of votes cast was only 55. The winners are as follows.

CANNING DEMONSTARATION

At Tecumseh H. S. on March 10th from one to three o'clock, E. C. Lindemann representing the Michigan Agricultural College and the U. S. department of Agricultural will explain the Junior Extension Work in Agriculture and Home Economics as carried one in the Boys' and Girls' clubs. These clubs are divided into two classes. Class A includes boys and girls between the ages of ten and fifteen years. Class B includes those between fifteen and eighteen. The projects offered for the boys are the growing of corn, potatoes, apples, livestock, poultry and market gardening; for the girls housekeeping, garment making, canning, poultry and gardening.

Mr. Lindemann wishes to meet all boys and girls of Tecumseh and vicinity. Parents are also urged to come and help the movement.

WILL THEY SAY

Will the would-be saloon keepers say why they want saloons again in Lenawee County? They seem not to have any good reason for afflicting us with another local option election. We will say it for them. They want to make easy money at the expense of our boys and girls. They want to reduce a lot of families to beggary. They want to fill the jail and the poor house as they did five years ago. They want to increase the taxes by increasing crime, as they did in former years. They want to draw from legitimate lines of trade $450,000 annually, as they did in former years.

The prosecuting attorney's reports show that arrests from drunkenness from 1907-1909 numbered 748 and from 1910-1912 they numbered 296; in other words 452 less arrests for drunkenness during the years we were free from saloons.

SPANISH COMPANY

The Evening Wisconsin, Milwaukee, Wis.

The first of the Artists' Series, under the auspices of the Woman's Union, of Tabernacle Baptist Church was given Wednesday evening before a delighted and appreciative audience by the Spanish company. The artists completely satisfied the high expectations of music lovers and critics present. Emile Follmer, tenor, distinguished himself by his rendering of the Ariosa from "Pagliacci," when both his intense sympathy, and the power and range of his voice were displayed to pleasing advantage. The ease and sweetness with which Mrs. Powers sang her group of three ballads, "The Night Wind" the Night Nursery" and the Proposal," were complemented by her charming and unaffected manner.

The selections from "Carmen" by these two vocalists, in Spanish costume was not only delightfully picturesque, but also rich in the quality of tone and the harmony of their voices. Miss Desmond made a potent appeal to her audience by her technique and wonderful interpretation of Liszt's "Sixth Rhapsody as well as by her natural poise and vivacious personality. Miss Desmond deserves special praise for the artistic and intelligent manner in which she accompanied the other artists.

The 'cello solos by Senor Antonio Sala, court 'cellist of Spain, were splendidly played. Anticipation was fully satisfied, when "Chopin's "Nocturne" and the "Swan" from Saint-Saens were played with wonderful feeling and touch.

If the city of Milwaukee could get such pleasure from this concert, surely Tecumseh will be well repaid by attending. Time, Saturday evening 8:30 at the Presbyterian church. Admission 50c.

JUST STOP AND THINK FOR A MINUTE

The automobile is now an important factor in our daily lives; no longer a luxury, but a means by which we come nearer to our goal of efficiency.

To own an automobile once is to feel that never again can you get along without one, the modern business man, therefore, purchases an automobile as he buys any other article on the market.

The car that will give the best return on the money invested is the car of his choice.

We have sold 5 Ford cars this week and 3 of them were men who have never owned a machine before, would it not be a good idea to drive a Ford car this year and should you decide to buy something better around a $1000 next season, you have learned how to take care of it anyway, that is worth something, your investment has been small and your depreciation much less.

Do not wait for Summer air and sunshine, our roads are good and we positively cannot promise you deliveries later.

The Hyomei Remedy for Catarrh, Colds and Croup a Most Valuable Discovery

The discovery of Hyomei has made a wonderful change in the treatment of catarrh, head colds and similar ailments—you simply breathe a medicated air using a small inhaler that comes with every complete outfit.

Hyomei is a combination of antiseptic oils that mixes with the air so that its health-giving medication must go directly to the sore, raw, inflamed lining of the nose, throat and bronchial tubes. It almost immediately stops the disagreeable nasal discharges, quickly relieves that choked-up feeling, heals and strengthens the delicate tissues.

The strongest evidence of Hyomei's curative value for catarrh, head colds, asthma, etc., is that your well-known druggist, C. A. Wright & Son, sells it under a guarantee to return your money if you are not satisfied. Do not delay treatment for Hyomei is not only harmless but pleasant to use, and nothing to pay if not cured. adv

THE MOST IMPORTANT ISSUE

The most important issue before the people of Lenawee county at the election on April 3rd is "Local Option—Wet or Dry." Do we want our boys to come in contact with the old soaks and bums, who acquired their thirst habits and their debanchery in the saloons of former days? To be sure of saving your boys and young men, vote dry and preserve both character and moral standard. Lenawee county should not be corrupted again by the saloon and its terrible consequences.

The results were very satisfactory. I am in hopes that other kidney sufferers will profit by reading of my experience. I willingly confirm the statement I gave before, praising Doan's Kidney Pills."

HOW A DEEP SEATED COUGH

And Sore Lungs Were Overcome by Vinol—Mr. Hillman's Statement of Facts Follows:

Camden, N. J.—"I had a deep seated cough, a run-down system and my lungs were awfully weak and sore. I am an electrician by occupation and my cough kept me awake nights so I thought at times I would have to give up. I tried everything everybody suggested and had taken so much medicine I was disgusted.

"One evening I read about Vinol and decided to give it a trial. Soon I noticed an improvement. I kept on taking it and today I am a well man. The soreness is all gone from my lungs, I do not have any cough and have gained fifteen pounds in weight and I am telling my friends that Vinol did it." — FRANK HILLMAN, Camden, N. J.

It is the curative, tissue-building influence of cods' livers aided by the blood-making, strength creating properties of tonic iron, contained in Vinol, that made it so successful in Mr. Hillman's case.

We ask every person in this vicinity suffering from weak lungs, chronic coughs, or a run-down condition of the system to try a bottle of Vinol on our guarantee to return your money if it fails to help you.

SITUATION STILL UGLY IN MEXICO

Belief Growing That President May Intervene.

LATIN AMERICA OPPOSES IT

European Representatives Accept President's Former Statement That This Country Will Not Enter Southern Republic Again—Negotiations Halted.

Washington, March 8.—The intolerable conditions at Mexico City under General Obregon continue unabated. The administration is still waiting for its urgent representations to Carranza to bear fruit. As yet the first chief has made no reply. Until Carranza has given his answer to the American communication it is the intention of the state department to delay consideration of any other method of procedure.

South America Opposes It.

A joint intervention by the United States and certain South American countries has been much talked of here. The difficulty is that while the proposal meets with considerable favor in official quarters it is frowned upon in every quarter directly interested. This administration does not regard it as either practicable or advisable, while the South American governments are positively opposed to it.

Recently European diplomatic representatives here most interested in Mexico have been given to understand that it is the intention of this administration not to go into Mexico again under any circumstances. These officials seem absolutely satisfied that this is indeed the policy of President Wilson and have so informed their governments.

In the last few days, however, there has been much talk to the effect that the president may find his hand being forced in the situation; that events may take such a bad turn that he will be unable further to ignore the problem and refrain longer from vigorous action. In this connection it was reported that informal inquiries were being made on behalf of the war department to learn what vessels would be available for charter in case of need for the transportation of troops to Mexico. Officials of the war department denied that such inquiries were being made by the department.

Sisal Imports Cut Off.

Another phase of the Mexican situation aside from the acute conditions at Mexico City, which is engaging the serious attention of the state department, is the state of affairs in Yucatan. By his action in closing the Port of Progreso because of factional fighting in progress there Carranza has struck a severe blow to American industries dependent to a large extent on sisal fibre, imported from Yucatan. This fibre is imported annually from Yucatan to the value of $22,000,000; all exportations of the Mexican product are now cut off with little prospects of shipments in the immediate future. Besides many industrial concerns affected the work shops of many prisons will suffer from the cutting off the supply of fibre used by them to make binder twine.

The suggestion that the president reimpose an embargo on shipments of arms to Mexico has been brought forward here in the last day or two but so far as can be learned the administration is not considering this step.

LA TOURAINE FIRE CHECKED

Ship is Proceeding to Havre Under Own Steam.

Paris, March 8.—Flames on board the steamship Touraine are now under complete control and have been confined to one compartment of the vessel's hull, the Compagnie Generale Transatlantique announces. All on board the steamship are now safe, it is added.

The Touraine is proceeding under her own steam for Havre, where she is expected to arrive tonight. Although she apparently is no longer in need of assistance, the Holland American line steamship Rotterdam is standing by as an escort to doubly safeguard those on board the Touraine in case of further difficulty, which, however, is not anticipated.
